THE WAR.

Prussian Scouts Within 25 Miles of Paris.

Motive of the Advance on the French Capital.

Defensive Measures Progressing Rapidly in the City.

Fifteen Hundred Guns Mounted.

Defeat of a Prussian Force at Verdun.

Surrender of the City of Vitry by the French.

Sixteen Guns and 850 Prisoners Taken.

PRUSSIAN PROGRESS.

The Advance on the Capital—Theory of the Constitutionnel—Obstructing their Progress—The Landwehr.

PARIS, Aug. 28.—The Constitutionnel says the Army of the Prince Royal, reinforced by part of the Army of FREDERICK CHARLES, is marching on Paris, through the valleys of the Aube and Seine. The Prussians must know how adventurous is such an attempt, and must be aware of the peril in which they are leading their main army. MCMAHON may cut off their communications and place them between two fires. To avoid this danger the Prussians made great efforts. They three times attacked BAZAINE with overwhelming forces, which the French Army successfully resisted. The enemy then, despairing of being able to conquer him, decided to keep BAZAINE checked, and march on Paris. From Paris to Sierck, the nearest point on the German frontier, is more than one hundred leagues. This line the Prussians must defend against our armies, numberless sharpshooters, and the Garde Mobile, to be able to subsist on our territory. The 600,000 invading Prussians must extend their lines vastly, and must disperse their forces, a thing so fatal to us in the commencement of the campaign. "Our revenge," says the Constitutionnel in conclusion, "is near."

DEFENDING THE ENEMY.

The Figaro says: "Contrary to the line of conduct hitherto pursued, (and the change is sufficient to show how often the military plans of the French have been modified during the past week by the authorities,) the people are invited to impede the enemy by all possible means. Bridges are to be blown up, railways cut, roads blocked, scouts killed, and the Prussians harrassed in flank and rear. Should this means of resistance acquire an importance which can scarcely be counted on, the enemy will not be here for fifteen days; otherwise, which is more probable, they may reach Paris in a week. The latter opinion prevailed in the Corps Legislatif yesterday."

IN THE LANDWEHR IN THE FIELD.

L'Opinion Nationale says German journals, and those of Belgium, have asserted that the troops of the Landwehr are not yet in the field, with the exception of the artillery. Nothing can be more false than this statement. Every one acquainted with the organization of the Prussian forces is aware that the first ban of the Landwehr, consisting of men from twenty-five to thirty-one years of age, have formed the greater part of the Prussian forces. Not only did that portion of them enter the field as soon as the mobilization of the army was ordered, but the regiments, brigades and divisions of the second ban of the Landwehr, in the provinces near est to France, have reinforced the armies of FREDERICK CHARLES and STEINMETZ. The fact of calling on the second section of the Landwehr being called on for service outside of Prussian territory, has not occurred since the campaigns of 1813. Prussia, therefore, says the Opinion Nationale, is making her final effort.

WITHIN TWENTY-FIVE MILES OF PARIS.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 27.—Prussian scouting parties are at MEAUX, one hour from Paris. [Meaux is situated on the railroad to Strasbourg, about twenty-five miles east north-east from Paris, and on the river. It has a population of about 6,000, and is the capital of the Arrondissement and Department of Seine-et-Marne. It is a tribunal of commerce and has a commercial college and a library of 19,000 volumes. In 1520, the English besieged it and captured it after a five months' siege.]

La Presse on the Prussian Advance—What the "Obstinate Old Man" May Expect in Case of Failure—Prussians at Meaux.

PARIS, Aug. 28.—La Presse says: "The official announcement made in the Chambers that the Prussians are marching on Paris causes neither astonishment nor fear in the capital. The Parisians receive it with quiet resolution. King WILLIAM is fatally led to this hazard in spite of the serious strategic reasons which should turn him from it. If it is considered that this obstinate old man has raised a million men, whom he will never take back across the Rhine, it will be easily seen that he finds it necessary to risk a bloody battle at the foot of our towers. There is not one German in all Prussia, Bavaria, Wirtemberg or Baden who would not turn and curse the King, should he not make a supreme effort to come here and dictate a peace in Paris. How could he return to Germany in the midst of the desolation of families, the misery and depopulation of city and country? Should he not win a bloody success, his defeat would be complete." This is the decisive reason—a reason more political than military—that brings the old King under our walls."

FROM THE FRONT.

Success on Both Sides—Surrender of Vitry to the Prussians—A French Victory at Verdun—10,000 Prussians Repulsed.

PARIS, Aug. 27—Midnight.—The following official intelligence has been made public:

On the 25th inst., at 9 o'clock in the morning, Verdun was attacked by the Prussians, 10,000 strong, commanded by the Crown Prince of Saxony. After an ardent combat, which lasted three hours, during which time 300 shells were thrown into the city, the Prussians, much injured by our artillery, were repulsed. The loss is considerable. The Garde Nationale served our guns. We have five killed and twelve wounded. The enemy fired on an ambulance train, which was struck seventeen times. Two persons belonging to it were killed. The citizens made a vigorous defense.

The movement of the Prussians along the Aube seems to have been arrested. They are falling back on St. Dizier. Large bodies of infantry are passing through Luneville and Bayon.

CAPTURE OF VITRY.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—The following official dispatch is dated Bar-le-Duc, Friday night: The garrison of Vitry surrendered on Thursday morning. The Prussians captured thirteen guns. Two battalions of the French Garde Mobile were annihilated by the Prussian cavalry. Seventeen French officers and 850 soldiers were captured. The Prussians had one Major severely and three troopers slightly wounded.

FRENCH VICTORIES CLAIMED.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—The Opinion Nationale says battles were fought on the 23d and 24th, which resulted in the wholesale slaughter of the Prussians. The same paper says STEINMETZ was beaten on the former date and FREDERICK CHARLES on the latter. On Thursday last Epernay, the National Guard repulsed a Prussian force.

MEZIERES, via BRUSSELS, Aug. 27.—The Prussians are retreating before the France-Tireurs and the peasants, from Stenay to Dun.

THE BESIEGED CITIES.

PARIS, via BRUSSELS, Aug. 28.—The sieges of Strasbourg, Toul, Thionville and Metz have made no progress. The capitulation of BAZAINE for want of supplies, is expected.

PARIS, Aug. 26.—The Gaulois says it is reported that the Prussian administration of Alsatia and Lorraine is exceedingly tyrannical and exacting.

ARLON, Aug. 27, via BRUSSELS.—The Prussians have summoned Longwy to surrender, but the commanding officer refused.

McMahon's Army—The Emperor and Prince Imperial—A Battle Looked for in a Day or Two—A Prussian Council of War.

PARIS, Aug. 28.—Marshal MCMAHON's main Army is at Stenay. The Emperor is at Raincourville, and the Prince Imperial at Rethel. The Prussians push their reconnoissances as far as Montmedy.

A FIGHT IMMINENT.

La Liberté of today says that a General of the Army of the Rhine arrived in Paris last night, had an interview with the Empress, and started immediately on his return. We may expect within a day or two a brilliant combat. La Liberté adds that a personage who saw the Emperor on the 26th, affirms that the armies of BAZAINE and MCMAHON are near each other.

A PRUSSIAN COUNCIL OF WAR.

The Journal of France of today says: "We learn from a certain source that before ordering the army of the Prince Royal to march on Paris, the King held at Pont-à-Mousson a council of war, composed of Generals and Princes commanding the Prussian forces. The advice of all was to remain in the territory which had been conquered, fortifying the right bank of the Moselle. The King alone determined to march on Paris."

The Prince Royal slept night before last at the Chalons prefecture.

The German Forces—Distribution and Commands of the Armies in France.

BERLIN, Aug. 28.—The disposition of the German Armies is, as follows: There are eighteen corps d' armée, containing 40,000 men each. The first army under STEINMETZ, has the First, Seventh and Eighth Corps at Metz; the second army, under Prince FREDERICK CHARLES, the Second, Third, Ninth and Tenth Corps, at Metz; the third army, under the Prussian Crown Prince, the Fifth, Sixth and Eleventh Corps, and two Bavarian corps, marching on Paris; the fourth army, under the Crown Prince of Saxony, has the Fourth and Twelfth Corps, and the Saxon and Prussian Guards; the fifth army, under Gen. WANGEL, has the Wurtemberg and Baden divisions, and is engaged in the siege of Strasbourg; the sixth army, under the Grand Duke of MECKLENBURG-SCHWERIN, is on the Rhine; and the seventh army, under Gens. VON CANSTEIN and LOWENFELD is at Berlin. Three of these armies are in reserve.

PARIS.

A Siege Deemed Inevitable—Prussian Removal of the Seat of Government to Lyons—An American Sanitary Train—Arrests.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—REUTER's telegram says the siege of Paris is deemed inevitable. It is even said that the Government prefers that result to a pitched battle. The papers invite the French to rush to the defense in spite of the supineness of the Government. The Paris journals also say the advance of the Crown Prince is fatal to the Prussian campaign. The forts around Paris have been armed, garrisoned and provisioned. M. THIERS' appointment on the Committee of Defense is the result of a special decree. The Soir denounces the inactivity of the French fleet.

NEW SEAT OF GOVERNMENT PROPOSED.

The removal of the seat of Government to Lyons is suggested.

PARIS, Aug. 26.—In case of a siege of Paris, the Government officials, other than the ministers, will go to Tours, Bourges and Lyons, to administer the Provinces unravaged by the enemy.

AN AMERICAN SANITARY TRAIN.

Today the train of American ambulances under the direction of Dr. MARION SIMS, left the city for Metz. Dr. PRATT and many other members of the United States Sanitary Commission accompanied the train in uniform. The daughters of Dr. SIMS marched at the head of the procession, bearing the banners of France and the United States. A great sensation was created among the spectators as the train moved through the streets. The crowds cheered and gave liberally to those collecting money for the wounded. The ambulance service will be strictly impartial in its ministrations, treating French and Prussian wounded alike.

SUSPICIOUS PERSONS.

Arrests of vagrants and suspected parties have been suspended by an order of the Prefect of Police, who has no more places in which to keep them. The journals say the persons under arrest will soon be disposed of and the arrests continued, as the population are loud in their exclamations against the Germans and others now in the city, who, in case of siege, might be capable of acts of treachery.

Over 250,000 beeves, sheep and hogs, are now in Paris.

MILITARY ADMINISTRATION.

M. GRANIER DE CASSAGNAC has petitioned the Chambers, at the request of many inhabitants of Paris, that all Germans now in Paris and its environs be expelled.

It is proposed, in case of a siege, that the Minister of War shall leave Paris, so that the military administration of the city shall not be at any time impeded.

THE CORPS LEGISLATIF.

Announcement of the Success at Verdun—Thiers and the Committee of Defense—Disastrous Results of Not Arming the People.

PARIS, Aug. 28.—In the Corps Legislatif, yesterday, the Count DE PALIKAO announced that 10,000 Prussians attacked Verdun, and were repulsed with heavy loss; and he gave particulars as previously telegraphed. M. ARAGO demanded information on the situation of the Prussian Armies, but the Minister of War declined to reply. The law calling into the ranks married men who have served in the army was rejected.

THE COMMITTEE OF DEFENSE.

M. THIERS made an explanation of his position. He said he only knew of his appointment as a member of the Committee of Defense, from the columns of the Journal Officiel that morning. He accepted the trust through devotion to his country; but, he said, he must have the support of the Chambers. This declaration was received with applause. The President thereupon announced that the entire Chamber accepted the appointment of M. THIERS.

DISTRIBUTION OF ARMS.

To a question put by M. PIHARD, Count PALIKAO answered that the distribution of arms to the National Guard was the prerogative of his administration, and that he would not permit it to devolve on a subaltern.

THE FAILURE TO ARM THE PEOPLE.

In the Senate, yesterday, M. LAFAUVE, after a communication from the Minister of War, giving details of the occupation of the country by the Prussians, said if certain villages and towns which were invaded remembered too quickly it was hardly their fault. The Government, (not, however, the present Cabinet,) with a strange lack of forethought, had constantly refused to arm the people of Alsace, Lorraine and Champagne, thus betraying a lack of confidence in the people which had cost the country dear. for had these peasants, who are good marksmen, been armed, the army of the Prince Royal of Prussia would not have so easily crossed the Vosges, where our men, hidden from view, could have inflicted such loss upon them that France would not have been compelled to abandon her second line of defense.

SURGEONS.

Alleged Violation of Neutrality—Engaging Surgeons for the Prussian Army.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—It is said that the French Minister has represented to this Government, in a way of protest, that he has reason to believe that the North German Legation, or others, by its authority, have been engaging surgeons in this country to serve in the Prussian Army. This is denied by Germans as to Baron GEROLT, although it may be true as to one or more of the German Consuls. From what we can learn both the French and German Ministers scrupulously avoid any infraction of our Neutrality laws, and are prompt to cause a due observance of them on the part of subordinate officers of their respective countries, while our own Government will strictly enforce a compliance with the principles of the late proclamation of President GRANT.

PROGRESS OF THE INVADERS.

Triple Line of Prussian Advance—The Northern, Central and Southern Routes to Paris—The Chances of the French Generals.

All the indications in today's telegrams combine to show that the plan of invasion of the Prussian staff officer, which we republished on Saturday, is being pretty accurately followed up. In the north we hear of the invaders leaving Metz and Thionville in their rear, appearing before Longwy, close to the Belgian frontier, and in having likewise pushed their reconnoissances to Montmedy, situated twenty miles farther west. The main portion of McMAHON's command is reported to be about seven miles south-west of this, at Stenay, on the Meuse. Should the Marshal elect to stay there, a conflict is, therefore, inevitable; and should BAZAINE's army, as reported, be near this point also, a battle of some magnitude may be anticipated. If seems, however, to be now the settled tactics of the French commanders to allow the Prussian line to become much attenuated as excessive length can make it, before making a final effort to interrupt and destroy it. The wooded and elevated region of the Ardennes which lies between Stenay, in the Valley of the Meuse, and Rethel, the head-quarters of the Emperor, in the valley of the Aisne, can scarcely be expected, therefore, to witness a struggle of any moment at the present juncture. The northern line of the Prussian advance is obviously being traced with a view of keeping open a retreat, to the nearest point of the frontier, for the army which will shortly appear before Paris. As a French journal justly remarks, the distance from Paris to Sierck, the nearest point to the German frontier, is 100 leagues, (242 miles,) and over this immense distance the Prussians must keep their communications unbroken. To secure this it is highly important that they should gain possession of the great frontier railroad, extending in a north-westerly direction from Thionville to Mézières, from which latter point a connecting line proceeds south-west to Rheims and Epernay, from which again the Great Eastern Road follows the course of Marne to Paris. The three places, the possession of which is of vital importance to this object, are Thionville, Sedan and Mézières, all fortified towns, and, judging from the example of Thionville, not likely to prove easy of capture. In spite of a reported repulse, a determined effort will, doubtless, likewise be made to take Verdun, since in addition to its strength and general strategic importance, it forms the key to the possession of about seventy miles of railroad which joins the main line to Paris at Chalons, or twenty miles further east than the junction of the more northerly line at Epernay. This main railroad line, which extends from Strasbourg to Paris, is already for the greater part of its length in the hands of the Prussians. Taking Hagenau, in Alsace, as a point of departure, there is only one important point on the route, of at least 180 miles, which connects it with Paris, now in possession of the Prussians. That point is Toul, and it is scarcely probable that the artillery of so small a fortress can seriously interfere with the free transmission of both men and supplies along the entire route. The surrender of Vitry, about eighteen miles south-east of Chalons, and situated on the same line, gives the Prussians possession of a highly advantageous centre, from which their forces may be pushed forward along the valley of the Marne, may be sent to the capital by the more direct though less accessible route by Sézanne, or may be thrown across to follow the course of the Aube toward the Seine valley and Paris.

The appearance of Prussian scouts at Dijon is significant of an advance by the army of which we have heard so little that was collected on the confines of the Black Forest at the southern extremity of Baden. It may be that we have here the first indications of the presence of the newly mobilized Fourth German Army, announced to be under the command of the Crown Prince of Saxony. As we have already more than once pointed out, Dijon is a highly important railroad centre, besides being a place of considerable commercial importance, and commands also the passage from this point into the upper end of the Valley of the Seine. If this southern movement is really the prelude to an advance in force, the exact reproduction of the Prussian staff officer's plans will be complete, and a similar fidelity of prognostication may be expected in his description of how Paris ought to be besieged. The information of three German Armies of reserve used only to be referred to as a proof of the modern extension of the remark made seventy years ago, "Prussia is not a country which possesses an army, it is an army which possesses a country," and as a proof, also, of the consistent and far-seeing caution with which the conduct of an apparently over-daring campaign has been distinguished. It is this want of temerity, joined to an equal lack of timidity, which will make most people interpret the French prophecies of an early Prussian disaster.

German Christian Contributions for the Victims of the War.

The Christian Commission of the German Young Men's Christian Association, organized for the purpose of aiding the sick and wounded of the Prussian Army, and encouraging the spiritual labor of the brethren in Germany among the soldiers, have collected since last Wednesday nearly $600, the amount subscribed being largely in excess of that figure. The Commission expect to give a better report next week. Churches, other religious bodies, and persons interested in this cause, can send their contributions to FERDINAND KEHR, No. 115 Norfolk-street, and HENRY BERGH, No. 95 John-street. All who desire may attend the meetings of the Commission every Wednesday evening at the hall of the Association, No. 69 Ludlow-street.

LATE WAR NEWS BY MAIL.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM-SHIP CITY OF PARIS.

The Inman steam-ship City of Paris, which left Liverpool Aug. 16, and Queenstown Aug. 18, reached this port last night. The regular supply of papers which reached us are later by two days than those at hand by the Celtoria.

NEUTRAL ENGLAND.

Circulars to the British Representatives in North Germany.

The following is a copy of a circular which has been addressed to Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular representatives in Germany:

FOREIGN OFFICE, Aug. 11.

Her Majesty's Government have learned with much regret that an impression exists in Germany that Great Britain is deviating from the attitude of neutrality which she has announced her resolution to observe, by giving France facilities for obtaining certain articles useful to her war, such as munitions of war, horses and coal, while such facilities are not accorded in an equal degree to the allied German States. It is not unnatural that, in a moment of excitement like the present, the German people should be more than ordinarily sensitive in watching the attitude of neutrality which they have ordered their Government and it is when so wondered at that they should for a time accept as facts unfounded rumors, and that they should somewhat hastily condemn as breaches of neutrality proceedings which, at a calmer season, they would not hesitate to pronounce, with that impartiality of judgment for which there are distinguished, to be strictly in accordance with the rules of international law and comity. Her Majesty's Government lost no time after the declarations of war had been exchanged, in announcing the determination of Great Britain to maintain a position of neutrality between the contending parties; and this position has been hitherto faithfully observed. It is not true that any facilities have been given, or any restrictions imposed, which are not equally applicable to both belligerents. The steps taken by Her Majesty's Government have been strictly in accordance with precedent and with the principles by which neutral nations, including Prussia herself, have been guided in similar circumstances. But, it now appears to be wished that Great Britain should go further; and that she should not only enjoin upon British subjects the obligations of neutrality, but that she should take it upon herself to enforce those obligations in a manner and to an extent wholly unusual. It is demanded that she should not only forbid, as she has always forbidden, the carrying of articles contraband of war; that is to say, that she should decide herself what articles are to be considered as contraband of war, and that she should keep such a watch upon her ports as to make it impossible for such articles to be exported from them. It required but little consideration to show that this is a task which a neutral Power can hardly be called upon to perform. Different nations take different views at different times as to what articles are to be ranked as contraband of war, and no general decision has been come to on the subject. Strong remonstrances for instance, have been made against the export of coal to France; but it has been held by Prussian authors of high reputation that coal is not contraband, and that no Power, either neutral or belligerent, can pronounce it to be so. But, even if this point were clearly defined, it is beyond dispute that the contraband character would depend upon the destination; the neutral Power could hardly be called upon to prevent the exportation of such cargoes to a neutral port; and if this be the case, how could it be decided, at the time of departure of a vessel, whether the alleged neutral destination were real or colorable? The question of the destination of the cargo can be decided by the Prize Court of a belligerent, and Prussia could hardly seriously propose to hold the British Government responsible whenever a British ship carrying a contraband cargo should be captured while attempting to enter a French port. Her Majesty's Government do not doubt that, when the present excitement has subsided, the German nation will give them credit for having honestly acted up to the duties of neutrality to the best of their power; and they are confirmed in this conviction by the recollection that, when Prussia was in the same position as that in which Great Britain now finds herself, her line of conduct was similar, and she found herself equally unable to enforce upon her subjects a stringent obligation against the exportation even of unquestionable munitions of war. During the Crimean war, arms and munitions were freely exported from Prussia to Russia, and arms of Belgian manufacture found their way to the same quarter through Prussian territory, in spite of a decree issued by the Prussian Government prohibiting the transport of arms coming from foreign States. Reflection upon these points may make the German nation inclined to take a juster view of the position now occupied by Her Majesty's Government. As regards the export from the country of horses and ammunition it appears from the latest tables which have been obtained from the British Customs that the number of horses exported during the months of July and August to Germany and Belgium is approximately 41, and to France 833. As regards the amount of munitions of war exported during the same period, it appears from the official reports that none at all have been exported to France, and only the following exports have been made to German, Belgian and Dutch ports: To Belgium, ordnance stores, &c., to the value of £600; shot-lead, or ros, 4 cwt.; to Hamburg, shot-lead, or iron, 5 cwt.; to Holland, shot-lead, or iron, 12 cwt. It is not irrelevant to this matter to quote the views recently expressed to a foreign Minister at Washington by the Secretary of State of the United States respecting the duties of neutrals in regard to trade in articles contraband of war. He is reported to have said that arms and ammunition of war are not considered to be articles of legitimate commerce by neutrals during war, and that the United States claimed the right to supply them to all belligerents without distinction, adding that, during the civil war in America, quantities of these articles had been bought from Western France, and Belgium. It may be well also to observe that the Belgian Government, though by a recent decree it has provisionally prohibited the transit and exportation of arms and munitions of war, excepts from this prohibition articles which can be clearly shown to be destined for a neutral Government, and reserves formally the right of free exportation for the future. I, with great truth, your most obedient, humble servant, GRANVILLE.

SECRET NEGOTIATIONS.

Count Bismarck on the "Project" Relating to Belgium.

Not content with divulging the project which appeared in the London Times of Aug. 18, in the Official Gazette, Count BISMARCK has communicated it to the Powers. The note containing it is as follows:

BERLIN, Aug. 10, 1870.

My telegraphic dispatch to the Ambassador of the North German Confederacy in London respecting the draft treaty published in the Times of the 18th ult. has induced Count Bismarck to inform him of the communication that draft in the Journal Officiel de l'Empire of the 20th ult. In my dispatch of the 12th ult. I have given a more detailed account respecting the said draft and its bearing upon French politics generally; since which the circular dispatch of the DUC DE GRAMMONT, dated the 24 of August has been communicated to the world at large. In adverting to these French utterances I have no intention to give any reply to them; the abundant matter they afford for criticism has been fully anticipated by the Press of all countries, France not excepted. The only object of the present communication is to transmit you a fresh piece of evidence, and so request you to bring it to the cognizance of the Government to which you are accredited. If it have not yields use of it before, this will serve as my reclamation, even at a late hour, to drag the germs of a monarch into the discussion of the acts of his ministers and representatives, and also because, considering the form of Government which avowedly exists in France up to the 2d of January last, I was not accustomed to hear that the draft treaty and the other proposals and arrangements alluded to in my dispatch of the 12th should have been submitted to me without the knowledge of the Emperor NAPOLEON. But certain statements which appear in the latest French utterances (notwithstanding my having recently been a different time) cause me, on the other hand, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs assures us that the Emperor NAPOLEON has never proposed to Prussia a treaty having the acquisition of Belgium for its object (que jamais l'Empereur Napoléon n'a proposé à la Prusse un traité pour prendre possession de la Belgique!) on the other, Count BISMARCK informs us that the draft treaty in question emanates from me; that all he had to do with it was to put it on paper—writing, so to say, from my dictation, (en quelque sorte sous ma dictée,) which he only did the better to apprehend my views; and that the Emperor NAPOLEON was made cognizant of the draft only after its completion at Berlin. Statements such as these render it indispensable for me to make use of a means at my disposal calculated to support my account of French politics and to strengthen the supposition I have previously expressed respecting the nature of the connection between the Emperor and his Ministers, envoys and agents. In the archives of the Foreign office at Berlin is preserved a letter from Count BENEDETTI to me dated Aug. 5 1866 and a draft treaty inclosed in that letter. Copies of both are appended to the present communication. The originals, in Count BENEDETTI's handwriting, I shall submit to the inspection of the representatives of the neutral Powers, and I will also send you a photographic fac simile of the same. I beg to observe that, according to the Memoirs, the Emperor NAPOLEON did pass the time from the 5th of July to the 7th of August, 1866, at Vichy. In the official interview which I had with Count BENEDETTI in consequence of this letter, he supported his demands by threatening war in case of refusal. When I declined, nevertheless, the Luxembourg affair was brought upon the carpet, and after the failure of this Hitz, he insisted on the compensation proposal relative to Belgium embodied in Count BENEDETTI's draft treaty published in the Times. I request you to read this dispatch to the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and to transmit to him a copy or a translation of the same, as also a copy of the documents inclosed. You will also be good enough to lay before him a photographic fac simile directly it comes to hand. On behalf of the Chancellor of the Confederacy

VON THILE.

THE CONTEST.

The Battle-Field of Woerth After the Struggle.

Correspondence of the Daily News.

The swift and skillful movements against Wissembourg, resulting in complete success to the German arms, was but a foretaste of the storm which threatened the northern part of Alsace. On the second day after Wissembourg came the battle of Woerth, and the Crown Prince gained a great victory over the ablest General in France. It is admitted that the French fought with reckless courage, and that they inflicted heavy loss on their opponents; but the fact of this hard fighting and of this heavy loss shows how serious a defeat was sustained by McMAHON. I traversed the battle-field where the dead still lay unburied on the trampled ground, and could form a good notion of how the fight had gone by the ghastly evidence which remained. Woerth is at the bottom of a fertile valley, between two ridges of cultivated ground. There is a quantity of woodland in the intervals between and around the French position, or on the western side of the valley, there is a strip of forest which forms a cover for retreating troops. The little river Bruder, not deep enough in Summer time to float a skiff, flows through the village, and a high road comes winding down toward it on the eastern side of the valley, flanked by long rows of poplars, stretching far to right and left. Along this road were heaps of spiked helmets to be seen, and cart-loads of needle-guns collected under the trees. At a distance the French musketry fire had told more heavily than the German, and I heard that the French artillery had been very well served. But though the burying parties were busily employed on the third day on the eastern side of Woerth, there was more than an exchange of sanguinary work on the western side. Here the Prussians and Bavarians had pushed forward in strong force, and their fire had told fearfully upon the French. The high spirit and rigid discipline of the one army had been more than a match for the desperate resistance of the other. Whole companies of Frenchmen had been mowed down in their wild attempts to check the enemy's advance. It had been a totally equal fight in some places, for the ground was strewn with German dead. But more and more French had fallen in proportion. Black Turcos and wide-trousered Zouaves lay thick as many poists, and the Cuirassiers had suffered much. There were steel breast-plates and brass helmets scattered thickly on the line of the retreat, while the dead horses in all directions might be counted by hundreds. The ground, even through the wood, went the traces of increasing disaster—officers and men lying grimly where they had fallen, some of them in quiet, shady spots as though they were picnickers asleep; pools of blood where the wounded had been found, knapsacks, rifles and overcoats rather thrown away in flight or left by the wounded on the field. Then came a spot where the French had rallied, and where the dead of both sides lay thick. Turcos might be seen who had evidently fought to the last, and had tried to fire their pieces as they lay. French men of the line regiments had been found there fallen in numbers, as though having halted and faced about in regular order. But the aspect of the fields beyond the wood seemed to indicate a hasty retreat. Wagons were overturned, baggage was thrown out upon the road-side, and many knapsacks were to be seen. No one who had passed over that battle-ground of Woerth when it could have been visited by tourists, a year or two disasters and defeats the French arms, though at a time when most of the wounded had been removed, and on so large a scene of action it would have been impossible to judge of the exact loss sustained. However, I see no reason to doubt the official return on the German side, which gives about 1,500 Prussians and 400 Bavarians killed and wounded, and about 6,000 prisoners taken by the victors—4,000 in the battle, and 2,000 more in the pursuit. These losses, with the further loss of cannon and colors, made Woerth an evil day for France. Well might the wounded Germans raise themselves to cheer the Crown Prince as he passed, and cry that Germany was safe. It will often be told how the armies met on the 6th of August, and how McMAHON made his unsuccessful effort to repel the invasion of Alsace, how the Prussians held the left of the line, the Bavarians and Wurtembergers the right, and how the Crown Prince, brought up just in time to share the honors of the day. There was a fierce attack on both sides, it being difficult to say which party began, and gradually as the German troops pressed round upon their opponent's line of retreat, the French were forced to retreat; and, as a retrograde movement that the retreat became very nearly a rout. The mitrailleuse-gouche proved itself to be fully the equal of the Chassepôt, and something more—so at least, say the German soldiers, with apparently good cause. Then, moreover, the Prussians knew their ground, and, having long been accustomed to it, and the Crown Prince handled his army so as to make most of the deadly fire of his infantry. The cavalry was not used for an attack in the first instance, but was sent in pursuit when the enemy began his retreat. It was a victory due to the patriotic ardor of the German troops, and to more anything in the disciplined tactics; but we must not forget that the French showed ardor likewise, and that the scale was turned for the Germans at Woerth by their intelligent understanding of the breech-loader drill, and by their steadiness in firing. These matters take time to learn, and I hope that our volunteers will have a chance of learning them before they are called upon to face a foe who may have learnt the new weapon at his leisure. We see the glorious results which Germany is reaping from her careful preparation.

PARIS SCENES.

General Desertion—Foreigners in France—Paris at Strangers.

Writing under date of Aug. 15, the Paris correspondent of the Times, says: "Paris is in great need of a little good news, for it has been very dull and sad of late. Last night at 10 o'clock, the crowds which usually at that hour on a Sunday evening flock along the boulevards and principal thoroughfares, on their return from their weekly holiday in the country, were nowhere to be seen. This is not surprising, for a friend who was yesterday at Enghien, a very favorite resort of the Parisians on Sundays, tells me that no one was there. I am told that the population of this capital has diminished by one-fifth within the last three weeks, and I have little doubt of the correctness of this information. The exodus has especially been within the last eight or ten days. Besides the troops, the Garde Mobiles, and the numerous volunteers, numbers of Parisians have gone to the country, and many are now out of France more remote from the scene of war. Then the Germans have been sent away in great numbers, and other foreigners have gone of their own accord, and I should think the floating population was now reduced to a very small number. I know not to what extent Germans married and settled in Paris have been able to obtain leave to remain, but I suspect only in rare and special cases, and I know of many having departed before they were ordered off, because they feared ill-usage. It would suffice for an evil-intentioned person to point out a man in the street and stigmatize him as a Prussian for the mob to act. That denounced to be a considerable danger. According to the latest statistics, France contained 826,428 foreigners, of whom 106,836 were Germans. The number of English was only 29,266. In Paris alone there were 82,184 Germans. Of these the greater part must now have gone, and most of the others will have to go. The passport offices at the Prefecture of Police, for natives as well as foreigners, are open daily from 8 to 4 and the rush and work are incessant.

STEFAN TURR.

Sketch of the Emissary of Bismarck and Napoleon.

From the Pall Mall Gazette, Aug. 16.

STEFAN TURR, the emissary of BISMARCK and NAPOLEON, seems to have led rather a chequered life. He is the son of a shoemaker, and was born in Baja, in Hungary, in 1825. In 1846 he was "ascented" into the Austrian Army, advanced after some time to a corporalship, and in 1848 went with the Imperial Regiment of Infantry, Archduke FRANCIS CHARLES, to Italy. He had been proposed for a Lieutenantship, when with some of the men he deserted over the bridge near Buffalo to the Sardinians. There he was made Colonel of the newly-formed Deserters' legion, the so-called Cispians. When after the battle of Novara Austria particularly insisted on having TURR given up, he escaped into Switzerland, whence he went to Baden, and there joined MIEROSLAWSKI. He now reappeared as Lieutenant-Colonel, and MIEROSLAWSKI promoted him to a Colonelcy. After the ill-fated affair in the Bergstrasse, he returned to Switzerland with 105 men, whom he threatened to Ausmerz himself rather than yield. He was next sent to Constantinople, and during the Crimean war obtained British naturalization, and went as British agent to Bucharest. There, on neutral ground he was arrested by the Austrians as a deserter, sent home and brought before a Court-martial at Marienburg, in Transylvania. Almost on the eve of being led out to execution, the Judge declared to him that Queen VICTORIA had interfered on his behalf, as a naturalized British subject, and that the Emperor had in consequence commuted his sentence to eternal banishment from the Austrian States. In 1859 he joined GARIBALDI, became Commander of the Chasseurs, received a wound and was promoted to a Generalship. Since 1861 he has sojourned chiefly in Paris, being one of the most intimate friends of Prince NAPOLEON, and in September 1863, married ADELINA WYSE BONAPARTE, second daughter of Princess LETITIA BONAPARTE, sister of PRINCE NAPOLEON, and nominal daughter of the English Consul WYSE, but born in 1842, long after WYSE had separated from his wife. The first legitimate daughter of WYSE was the wife of RAFAELE, the Princess SOLMS.

THE FRENCH NATION.

Will France Submit?—Views of a French Liberal.

From the Pall Mall Gazette, Aug. 17.

A great nation does not readily acquiesce in the necessity of taking a lower place in the hierarchy of European Powers than that to which she has been accustomed, and the very best terms which France could at this moment gain from Prussia would involve this much of degradation. Nothing that Lord GRANVILLE could propose could save her from this necessity, and there is not much chance that she will accept it. Even if we are over-estimating the perseverance and resolution of the French people in attributing to them this determination to go on fighting, we can hardly be wrong in supposing that they would only respect peace on the heights of breathing space in which to prepare to fight the battle over again with better fortune and a different result. There is no talk in France of the war having been a mistake; all we hear of is that it was a mistake to enter upon it so unprepared. Take, for example, the following extract from the "Chronique" in the new number of the Revue des Deux Mondes:

This war with Prussia was certainly inevitable. It must have broken out some day or other, and we will even venture to say that the late events have made the inevitableness still more apparent by forcing it so promptly to the decisive, that by bringing her relative weakness of war forces—a weakness already very great under the conditions of the treaties of 1815, and still greater since 1866 when Prussia annexed half the strength of the rest of Germany, bound together in a military union. These events have shown by sinister evidence where was the aggressive force, the permanent menace. Thus the war was one of those terrible exigencies which we were bound to foresee, which we could not decline at a given moment; but it was above all necessary to know whether we were prepared, and, if we were not ready, it was necessary to know how to wait. Everything depended on that. Now, no doubt, has the hazards of which no one is master. In so great a struggle reverses may happen; but when one knows the cause of them they are half repaired; they cease to be a reason for discouragement, and become, on the contrary, an energetic stimulant. Henceforth France, foiled by her unpreparedness, to have her revenge, we watches her; she can march to the conflict with a manly confidence because she feels her force, because she knows that her humor is that of the civilization and liberty of peoples.

This is the opinion of a moderate and sensible a Liberal as M. CHARLES DE MAZADE, the result of the war up to this time has only been to show that some addition of territory on the side of Germany is absolutely necessary to the safety of France. No doubt the chain of revenges may be so heavy and so unbroken that she may at least be driven into acknowledging that her former greatness is lost beyond the possibility of recall. But Prussia has a good deal to do before that period of exhaustion is reached, and even when it is reached we shall not readily believe that France will not be content to remain at it.

WAR NOTES.

As one of the characteristic results of the war, it may be mentioned that the Revue des Deux Mondes, a very respectable theoretical paper of more than forty years' standing, which was regularly published twice a week, has announced that for some time to come it will appear once a week only. The change is attributed to the want of theatrical reviews caused by the poverty of the theatres. Such a notification, thinks the Times, would be of small significance in England; but when the important part taken by the theatre in Parisian life is considered, it may be regarded a sign of the times.

The Queen of Prussia had sent the following telegram to Gen. HERWARTH DE BITTENFELD: In the joyful and grateful emotion I feel for the victories of our armies, I send you today two gold medals, one for the author and one for the composer of the song, "Die Wacht am Rhein," in which the passionate patriotism of our citizens and soldiers has so admirably found expression, and which has become a real national song for Germany." On the obverse of the medals is the bust of the King, and on the reverse the figures 1870, surrounded by a laurel.

Some days ago, say the London Echo, Marshal BAZAINE had gathered together at his dinner table at Metz the members of his family, of whom several are in the army. They were waited upon by a servant of remarkably good appearance and manner; so good, indeed, that the Marshal's wife was struck with it, and expressed her astonishment on leaving the table. The Marshal at first laughed at his wife's remarks, assuring her that the servant was not a grand seigneur in disguise, but a valet de chambre. Nevertheless, the Marshal's wife insisted so strongly, that the handsome-looking servant was arrested. He turned out to be a Prussian officer.

The Journal des Débats of Aug. 17, summarizes, without attaching much importance to it, a communication from the Havas News Agency respecting a journey which M. D'ARVIEU, a Prussian diplomatist, has just made to Rome. King WILLIAM is said to cherish the design of getting himself crowned Emperor of Germany after the war, and as Germany, more especially the Southern Provinces, contains a considerable number of Catholics, he is supposed to desire the Pope's consecration. He has offered to his Holiness, it is said, an asylum in Prussia, in case he should be compelled to quite Rome. This scheme of the future Emperor of Germany is no doubt ingenious enough as a means of combining the good will of the German Catholics, but will the Pope or the Protestants say of it? It is added that the Pope is much irritated with the Catholic States, France especially, for recalling her troops from Rome, and that he does not conceal his friendly feeling toward Prussia.

A SHAKESPEAREAN GRAMMAR. For the use of Schools. By E. A. ABBOTT, M. A. London: MACMILLAN & Co.

"How many maggots have crawled out of that hugs body!" said EDMUND BURKE, once, in speaking of "Bozzy and Piozzi," and the other biographers and critics of Dr. JOHNSON; and the same may be said, on a far larger scale, with respect to WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE—as most persons are aware. Here is one of the latest magnots—not to use the word disrespectfully, but only to carry on the figure as we began with it—and certainly not the worst of them; though we suspect the young lord Bacon, if called on to give his opinion of it, would answer, as he once answered Potenus: "Words, words, words." And yet the book is a fair book, and has its use. But why for boys? Whatever else the use may be, it is not, we have an idea SHAKESPEARE is not as all a fit book for boys—thinking, furthermore, that any teaching of him in school-classes would only tend to make them feel about him and his poetry as Lord BYRON felt for HORACE, whom he hated, and parted with on Harrow's Rides: It requires some culture, helped by a good deal of worldly cheerfulness, to love and appreciate SHAKESPEARE, who for the generality of minds has what GEORGE III. honestly called "a good deal of rubbish."

The Grammar before us is at any rate well meant—an effort in the mediæval and atomic direction followed of late by those who see how philology can help men to a knowledge of antiquity and the by-gone generations, and desire to make it in some sort a part of education. To those that schooling for forty years in, it may have been latterly a kind of surprise to see the Greek and Latin roots mentioned in common American school-books for small boys; and a later and a greater to see the Anglo-Saxon also introduced in the same way—so strange, and yet with such a "grossque air of reality." A knowledge of these origins is a good thing; and we shall very probably soon have the Sanscrit and the Hebrew radicals set forth in a similar manner—perhaps even the Welsh and the Irish. Our school-boys will be little polyglots in the days that are coming, and not the worse for that reason, since, in spite of POPE (ALEXANDER) "a little learning is a dangerous thing"—the great staple, in fact, of half, and more than half, the literary world; and the time for that classic superciliousness is fairly gone by. Nevertheless, allowing for all that, and appreciating the philological worth of SHAKESPEARE, in a general way, we do not think he is exactly the grammatical author for the aforesaid school-boys.

Mr. ABBOTT's book is a very long list of all those Elizabethan turns of speech that differ from our present forms of expression—a work of great industry, swarming with quotations, in which those dead and gone words and sentences are marked in italic. They are not very lively or attractive, only odd and curious, and something like flies in amber, or picked out of amber, to speak more correctly. SHAKESPEARE sometimes used who instead of which; forsooth for aforsooth; wrathful for wrathful; blood hung for blooted hung. But these, and all his other peculiarities, leave his text clear enough in general for any reader of intelligence to understand; and even if they did not they are not explained here—at least our author does not engage in the work of clearing up any of the few uncertainties and obscurities of the Shakespearean drama. His book is a mortuary collection of verbal curiosities, and as such is calculated to be of interest to a verbal critic of the expressions in our language.

THE NEW TIMOTHY. A Novel. By WM. M. RIKER. New-York: HURD & HOUGHTON.

This novel, with a gospel name, is a clerical novel, and all the scenes and characters that go to make it up are conceived and treated from the clerical point of view, and in the clerical light. There is a remarkable bear-hunt, carried on by a set of tatterdemalions and vagabonds, a clerical device, and a clergyman—the hero of our story himself—rides at the head of the hunt, knocking himself off his horse, and coming in at the death notwithstanding, like any other bear-hunter in the world. The thing is, in fact, part of the clerical policy and programme, and the reader will be, no doubt, impatient to peruse this book for himself, and find out an explanation of such a strange proceeding. The book is certainly an attractive one, full of lively manners and affectations—one of these last being the fancy to call the calm, Grecian-faced and pensive Beloved John—which is keep the reader's mind in a wholesome, not too easy lazy state, but never in a drowsy or indifferent one. The interest of the story, in fact, is mainly kept up by the manners and the perpetual vivacity of the dialogue. The author shows himself a man of sprightly wit and cleverness, writing with a quick, decisive, off-hand air of superiority, as if he felt somewhere above that business of story-telling. In this his style is so infectious, and he proceeds to the end with such an appearance of levity regarding the people of his tale, that the reader begins not to care for them either, till the mode in which Mrs. General Lackens has made up her mind to die, and does die, pass them pretty much out of his mind—one much so, indeed. And yet it is a very clever and readable book.

ANCIENT CLASSICS FOR ENGLISH READERS. Edited by WILLIAM LEIGHTON BULL, M. A. Vols. XIII. and XIV. Boston: LEE & SHEPARD.

In two little books of this series we have the Iliad of HOMER and the Odyssey of HOMER. There is, in one of the old French Memoirs, a story telling of the Iliad contained in a nut-shell, the paper or parchment holding it being folded up into that space. It was rather an extravagant and good-for-nothing fancy, even if the nut were a cocoa-nut, which we strongly suspect it was. Here we have in English an analytical outline of HOMER which may be got into a good-sized vest pocket. But this miniature is a good and serviceable one; and, though we cannot say it loses no drop of that immortal man, it gives a clear notion of his mighty poem, which, to say the truth, is always more written about than read. In our day "life is too short for the "art" of HOMER; and it is chiefly when he comes in the name of WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT here, or Lord DERBY in England, that the general reader takes him up. For that reader the epitome before us is just the thing. Mr. COLLINS has done his work with spirit and judgment, giving in a happy style the repersible and rambling plot of "that tale of Troy divine," and notes, as he goes along, any passages in the poetic thought of the moderns which may have been derived from the Greek bard. His paraphrasism is so agreeably varied with short poetical extracts in translation that the reader may do what few people formerly did—read the Iliad or the Odyssey through in a sitting or two. The former will be found the grander poem—more gods and single combats in it; but the Odyssey much the more agreeable on account of the wanderings of its hero.

FIRST LESSONS IN MENTAL ARITHMETIC. Edited by SAMUEL D. BARR. New-York: IVISON & BLAKEMAN.

When ALFIERI was introduced to LOUIS XV., and only got a solemn stare without any return of politeness, he complained to a friend saying: "If an ass were introduced to a gland the latter should at least be civil enough to say "What a very small creature!" ALFIERI was right, and so thinking, we politely recommend this little work, though it is meant for very small boys. Still, we really think it has the defect of most of our educational books—too many words, too much explanation, too much radiation. Here, at Lesson Seventy, Page 36, we have the question, "Walter's mother gave five apples to each of her three children. How many did she give to all?" This is followed by an explanation of a page and a half. Children very soon learn the rudiments of arithmetic—"three and four are seven," &c.—without teaching—just as they pick up words; and they do not probably need half the dictate words prepared and printed for them—at least till they are big boys—when they are better able to understand the rationale of things.

THE OLD MASTERS. Translated from the French by Mrs. S. R. URBINO. Boston: LEE & SHEPARD.

In this undertaking the translatress had a very appropriate Raphaelitish name, to begin with, and the work itself was very well worth wondering into English. In our day, when readers are swarming by the million in all the active walks of life, and wishing to know much in a brief space of time, a book like this will be generally appreciated, since it presents all those "princes of art" at one easy view; while all or nearly all that the modern literature of books and reviews is in the habit of saying on that very brilliant and attractive theme, will be found suggested in it. It is written in the best French style, and very happily translated. For those unacquainted with the subject of the great sculptors and painters, and who have yet to learn the nomenclatures of the fine arts, it contains a valuable amount of information, and at the same time furnishes those precise biographical facts and criticisms to which the best informed may find it necessary to refer. There are portraits of those "old masters" accompanying the narrative of their performances and personal character.

THE HOME OF WASHINGTON. By BENSON J. LOSSING. Hartford, Conn.: A. S. HALE & Co.

This beautiful book, published by subscription, would form one of the most elegant ornaments of a parlor table, while it is calculated to be a very attractive household book on any table. It is really as good as a visit to Mount Vernon, and those who cannot find it convenient to go to the actual home of Washington may be here gratified to see that venerable place brought to them, both as regards its exterior and its contents, of whatever nature or name, of past or present time.

Everything associated with our great first President that could be represented in an engraving is found in these pages. The illustrations are one hundred and fifty in number, including views of dwellings, portraits of distinguished men and women, autographs, seals, medals, banners, household articles, mortuary inscriptions, swords, pistols, vases, uniforms, the coronation picture of LOUIS XVI., a pack-saddle, a harpsichord, and a boot-jack. The texts of these, and all the rest, is a very agreeable kind of biographical accompaniment, full of personal traits, curiosities and anecdotes, many of which will be new to the general reader.

A ROUND OF STORIES.

Bear and Forbear. Written by Oliver Optic, and published by LEE & SHEPARD, of Boston. There is a good deal in a name—when it is that of Oliver Optic; since it is a letter of recommendation to all the boys and girls in society. Here we have a story, which, with a happy touch of personnages, has the irresistible attraction which no boy can wholly withstand. There is a moral in it too; but as it is dressed in a bear's skin, it will not be objected to.

Hardscrabble, or Rim Island. By Rev. ELIJAH KELLOGG, and from the same publisher, carries also a certain interest in its nomenclature; and Oliver may have to look to his laurels. Both these stories are illustrated in a very attractive way.

The Old Countess. From the German of EDMUND HOFFER, published by LIPPINCOTT, retains the flavor of its origin in translation, and being well written, is calculated to interest many readers from the fatherland, familiar with our language, though it is not sufficiently "spry," perhaps, to take the fancy of the American reader.

Forgiven at Last. By JEREMIAH B. HADDEMAN, from the same publisher, is a story told with great animation and power, the writer showing herself possessed of a happy facility of description, with a good deal of humor and gentle feeling, while the passionate scenes, in which she is equally at home, are represented naturally, and without exaggeration. Her style is womanly enough, for all that, and her story is one of the most attractive we have met with latterly.

THE FALL RIVER STRIKE.

Full Account of the Difficulty From the Beginning—Particulars of the Demonstration on Thursday Evening.

A special dispatch published in the Boston Herald of yesterday, gives the following account of the strike of the mule-spinners at Fall River, and its results, and the measures taken on Thursday, which prevented a serious riot at the mills:

The appearance of military companies in the streets this evening, and the passing and repassing of uniformed people in the vicinity of the City Hall, gave the city a martial air for a time. But all is now at rest, no disturbance is apprehended, although it is generally believed that a scene of violence and riot would have been enacted if the authorities had not taken precautions to prevent a disturbance. The spinners in the mills at this place were notified six or eight weeks ago, they a reduction of seven per cent would be made in their wages, and they in turn gave notice that in two weeks they would cease work. The employers and employes were firm in their determinations, and this, the germinal movement in the present difficulty, has led to the disemployment of nearly fifteen thousand operatives, the other operatives being dependent upon the labor of the spinners for their work. The feeling of what was deemed an avaricious one on the part of the corporations has been in progress ever since, only a few of the mills doing any work, and they very little, the Devil, the Troy and Fall River companies employing a few spinners who were not of the association, while a few companies had no apprentices. Yesterday (Monday) or Tuesday did the Durfee Mill commence operations, when a few spinners were obtained. This afforded work in other branches to a small party of operatives, and their action in going to work was severely condemned. When the fact became known, on Tuesday last, a crowd collected in front of the mill on Pleasant street, and when the operatives left at the close of the day's duty, hooting, yelling and general execration against the "ratters" was indulged in. Nothing very serious took place, however, until Wednesday evening, when the crowd was greatly augmented, and demonstrations of violence were anticipated. Mr. BEATON, the agent of the Durfee Corporation, dispatched a messenger to the city for aid. The officers replied promptly and endeavored to quell the demonstration. Every minute brought fresh additions to the crowd, and finally an alarm was sounded, and the fire-engines cleared the street in front of the mill by copiously drenching a portion of the assembled assemblage. Mayor BROWN addressed the crowd, and ordered them, in the name of the Commonwealth, to disperse. The operatives appeased soon afterward and were escorted to their homes by the Police. One man, who endeavored to use violence against a scabby, had his head and white hat taken off by the Police. The officers were assailed with a shower of stones and other missiles, and the prisoner was rescued. One of the officers was severely cut upon the head, but was able to perform duty today. Indications pointed to another disturbance this evening, and a force of 100 extra policemen was called for. About sixty of them are present on duty. Mayor BROWN and Aldermen MORTON requested a military force of two companies to suppress, or rather prevent, any intended riot; and four companies responded. The reports which were circulated in Boston today were somewhat colored, no disturbance of any kind having taken place here during the day, and only a few persons collected in front of Pleasant-street, in front of the Durfee Mill, so-called, but a force of cadet police were present to enforce order. The crowd was composed principally of young men, boys and girls, and they hooted and jeered loudly. Shortly before seven o'clock the small party of operatives appeared at the gates of the mills, and a bedlam of discordant yells and shouts greeted them. The police, as on the preceding evening, escorted the operatives home, and barring a good deal of chaffing and the noise already referred to, nothing of interest took place. A few score boys and one or two disorderly men were apprehended, and the show being over the assemblage dispersed. This afternoon four companies of militia reported to Col. THOMAS J. BORDEN, at the New Armory Building, on Pleasant-street. Two of these were of Fall River, and the rest of the companies were fifteen spinners, by whom these daily demonstrations are discountenanced. These are the Taunton companies here, with pretty full ranks, although not called upon until after 6 o'clock this afternoon. The men are quartered in the Armory Building, and the organizations are as follows: Company A, of Taunton, Capt. WILLIAM WITHERELL; Company C, of Taunton, Capt. FRANKLIN MASON, 40 men; Company D, of Fall River, Capt. S. B. BEALEY, 38 men; Co. B, of Fall River, Capt. E. T. MARVEL, 40 men. The field and staff officers of the Third Regiment are as follows: Col. THOMAS J. BORDEN, Lieut.-Col. R. DAVOL, Adjt. MATHEW TAYLOR, Assistant-Surgeon Isaac Sturtz, Jr., and Quartermaster E. B. BOWEN. The Taunton companies reached here between 4 and 5 o'clock, and marched from the depot without any demonstration whatever, even the drummer being silent. A force of eighteen State Constables from Boston, with a couple of members of the detective force, arrived this evening and are quartered at one of the hotels. Officers are expected by the morning trains. The Mayor issued the following proclamation today:

Warren, It is made to appear to me, SAMUEL M. BROWN, Mayor of the City of Fall River, that there is threatened a disturbance of the peace of the city by the assembling together of large numbers of persons on the public streets, and that violence and bloodshed may be the result thereof; now, therefore, I hereby advise and request all good citizens who are in favor of preserving the public peace, to refrain from mingling in any such assemblage unless called upon to aid the public authorities; and I implore all citizens to remember that no good cause can be promoted by acts of violence.

SAMUEL M. BROWN, Mayor.

FALL RIVER, Aug. 25, 1870.

This evening the people generally obey this request and the city is quiet. A large number of the soldiers have been dismissed, and have gone to their lodgings. Only three of these were not factory hands but excited lookers-on at the scene in front of the Durfee Mill. Another of the prisoners is a woman, who threw a stone or lump of sand at an officer, and the fifth is a gamin who excited his large pocket locally for his evil good and the public peace. Among them are nearly a score of aliens in town. Among them are the Mechanic, Robeson, Davol, Pocasset, Union, Durfee, Granite, Troy, Fall River, Quequechan, Anawan, Merchants', Massasoit, Pocasset, Metacomet and American Linen Company. These corporations employ nearly 15,000 operatives, nearly all of whom are out of employment, and it is surprising, under the circumstances, that the city is so quiet.

THE IMPERILED CAPITAL.

News of the Occupation of Nancy—Proceedings of the Legislative Body—Movements of the Emperor—"The Mountain"—The Empress—An Engaged Marshal—Fortifying Paris.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Monday, Aug. 15, 1870.

The epoch of mystifications under sanction of the Government has not been brought to a close by the memorable lesson given in the disgraceful rout of the Ministry, accused, convicted, judged and executed an hour after the convocation of the Chambers.

THE OCCUPATION OF NANCY.

A sort of stupefaction reigned in Paris during the whole of yesterday, the 14th, caused by the appearance of a dispatch ending in the most decent possible fashion the naked fact that the ancient city of Nancy, capital of the proud Lorraine of former days, had been or was occupied by the Prussians. No previous notice had been given of the advance of the enemy so far inward, and this announcement was simply incomprehensible, after the solemn assurance on the part of the Emperor and of his new Cabinet that the Parisians should never again, from any reticence of the authorities, have cause to complain of being kept in ignorance of events in which every citizen is so nearly interested.

IN THE LEGISLATIVE BODY.

The terms of the dispatches were so ambiguous that it was evident that the whole truth was not disclosed. This breach of faith was not allowed to pass unobserved in the Chambers, and was the occasion of a most brilliant onslaught upon the entire Imperial system by M. GAMBETTA, the now recognized leader of the Opposition. M. GAMBETTA distinctly accused the Government of failing in exactness of detail, and in promptitude of promulgation of the intelligence it receives from the seat of war. Unluckily for the Ministers, the Opposition Deputy held in his hand irrestructible proofs of the most stupid blundering. The dispatch in question states that it was during the preceding night that a report had reached the Minister of the Interior that Nancy was occupied, which was only confirmed in the morning. The report in question was known all over Paris on Saturday morning, (the 13th,) and the Ministry had taken the pains to cause it to be officially contradicted by bills posted in all the public places; among them, in the Conference Hall of the Legislative Palace itself. The discomfiture of the Ministers may be imagined when M. GAMBETTA drew out gravely from his papers a fragment of a journal—L'Espérance—of Nancy from which he read that "Yesterday, (Friday,) 12th August, 1870, at 6 o'clock in the afternoon, a sorrowful day for us and our descendants, four Prussian soldiers took possession of the City of Nancy. Let us act quickly for our honor's sake, that since the day before, none of our soldiers were left in the place." Here M. GAMBETTA was interrupted by cries from the Imperialists, one of them, in a louder voice than the rest, called out, "There were no citizens either, I suppose." M. JULES FAVRE rejoined promptly, "Citizens have all been disarmed since the Empire." This little skirmish occasioned the utmost confusion, which was with difficulty repressed by the President. M. GAMBETTA continued with a soothing reproof to those who interrupted him: Gentlemen, when lamentable news of this sort are brought to the Tribune, they should be listened to in silence and consternation, accompanied by virile resolutions. Allow me to proceed with this painful incident." Consternation is a word not tolerated by the Imperialists, so M. ACHILLE JUBINAL, one of the tribe of insufficient sycophants of the Imperial household, protested with great show of offended dignity. M. GAMBETTA, always prepared, retorted: "While we are in the keeping of incapable rulers, the word consternation, gentlemen, is legitimate." Another scene of inexplicable confusion followed, in which M. JUBINAL talks of "indignation, yes, but never consternation!" and GAMBETTA, loud above all, is heard affirming that JUBINAL and his party have done nothing but bow humbly before fortunes that have led the country to the disastrous circumstances from which it is now suffering, and that all they have left to be done is to listen in silence and remorse.

The President, M. SCHNEITHAUS, made inefectual efforts to put an end to the disorders, which soon degenerated into a personal dispute, in which M. GAMBETTA maintained a dignified attitude and finally continued his reading, declaring that no protestations should prevent him from making heard, or from drawing his conclusions, when he had finished. I therefore give the extract from L'Espérance as read in the Chambers.

"Nancy, an open city, had no soldiers left in it, and in the interests of the people, the municipal authorities recommended them to keep quiet. Half an hour afterward, a detachment of twenty-six Prussians passed through the city and took possession of the railroad station, the Superintendent and guards being declared prisoners on parole. The Mayor was then required to present himself to the officer in command of the expedition, encamped between Saint Max and the high road to Toul. In the meanwhile an officer of Uhlans, followed by two soldiers, galloped through the streets of the city in order to take note of its resources. On the return of the Mayor, the Municipal Council was called on to vote for the requisitions amount of fifty thousand francs, and a large number of rations of oats. They had asked for three hundred thousand francs, and considered fifty thousand francs a mere trifle for a city endowed with so many elegant edifices. During their short stay the Prussians lost no time. At the railway station notable property citizens, under a Prussian commander, were compelled to carry the baggage of the Mayor-ville, where they were thrown into the canal. The telegraph poles were also thrown down. The Uhlans were one hundred and fifty in number."

And all this occurred at Nancy on Friday afternoon—Nancy, within seven hours of Paris by express—the Ministry not judging it to announce the fact until Sunday morning, and even then evasively. It is, therefore, astonishing that the "Mountain" of 1870, like that of 1793, should launch forth its thunders against arbitrary sovereignty, and that GAMBETTA should sternly exclaim: "We must know, yes or no, if you intend to continue this system, which adds insupportable humiliation, and which causes you, Ministers, to be suspected by you distinctly understand me—of putting above everything else the interest of a dynasty and the safeguarding the country. Before thinking of saving one family, consider how many families of Frenchmen are already stricken!"

The Ministers of the Imperial Cabinet, prepared to answer for himself, the Minister of Public Instruction attempted to defend the Cabinet, but in so halting a fashion that nothing was left but to close the discussion by the usual mode of adding questions which could not be answered, which has prevailed in the French Chambers since the Empire. Later, the same Minister was brought up, and it was announced that it was through the mere gallantry of the Minister of Marine, JULES FERRY and M. KERATRY that the Minister of the Interior (M. CHEVREAU) had been induced at last to give the dispatch.

THE EMPEROR.

The intelligence contained in this morning's dispatches does not bear investigation. The Emperor's departure from Metz, accompanied by the Prince Imperial, is clear enough. His Majesty's farewell to the inhabitants of Metz is well conceived and touching.

"On leaving you to go and combat the invasion," he says, "I confide the defense of this great city to your patriotism. You will not permit the foreigner to seize on this bulwark of France, and you will rival the army in devotion and courage. I shall retain a grateful recollection of the welcome I met with within your walls, and I hope that in happier times, I will be able to come and thank you for your noble conduct."

"His Majesty and suite are represented as leaving Metz by the road to Verdun. This morning, however, it was stated on a telegram from the Emperor to the Empress, that Lancaville, six o'clock, (astonishing and alarming that the Prussians had been repulsed on the left bank of the Moselle. There are several Lancavilles, but it is evident that the one from which the Imperial dispatch was sent is situated on the line of the Eastern Railroad, only one hour and a half from the Camp de Chalons. It is to be inferred that the French Army is in retreat upon the fortress. Well informed in mentioning that a great strategic movement before Unatous is contemplated by Marshal BAZAINE. The whole aspect of affairs is mysterious, no one in Paris having been as yet officially informed of the passage of the Vosges Mountains by the Prussians. It is strongly suspected that the repulse of the enemy has been exaggerated in effort to stir up the embers of Imperialism in the capital today—the 4th day of the great NAPOLEON and of his damaged successor. No public demonstrations or illuminations or fire-works will be admitted in the very sight of the preparations for the celebration of the day commemorated the populace, and it was found necessary to remove all trace of them a fortnight ago. The attitude of His Majesty will be happy to learn, however, that he is in excellent health, and imagine of the utmost success of his armies.

"THE MOUNTAIN."

The Mountain made an effort to prevent the adjournment of the Chambers until to-morrow, but it was, as usual, overruled by the majority. It is affirmed that the firm attitude of Gen. PALIKAO alone saved the Chamber of Deputies from a "complete revolution," both on Thursday last and in the secret committee held yesterday (Sunday) morning. This complete revolution is only deferred. It is no longer the day for military dictatorships to succeed by the force of routine in suppressing the action of individual intelligence. Le Figaro, said so to-day to the Imperialists, ventures to say:

"However great the desire of every man may be to assure the safety of the country, it is more than evident that another thought impatients and disturbs all minds—a thought that no one dares to define exactly, aloud or in public, but which penetrates and shows itself in the most singular and most daring manner. What will be the form of Government to-morrow in France? The Left, with difficulty, contents itself. Impossible, it will burst forth on the first occasion. The Left, with difficulty, contents itself. Is disarming away rapidly. The right is like a ship which has lost its compass. Where is it drifting? Where is it being led? It does not know."

This is a very good picture of the present political condition of France. Another military disaster will define it much more absolutely. GAMBETTA's cry of "Let us make a Republican war," is finding new echoes every hour.

THE EMPRESS.

The Empress, in these days of trial, is said to be a model of resignation. One of the gentlemen of her household recounted to admiring listeners in an American salon, a few evenings since, that Her Majesty was really noble (vraiment digne) in the face of the approaching dynastic crisis—a fact "sublime in abnegation"—saying that if the people believe "We are not governing them for their honor and prosperity, we are quite willing to place the power in hands they judge better." A letter from a London paper, which I chanced to see a day or two ago, tells me that Her Majesty's residence at Seven Oaks, in Kent, is being prepared for her reception. Resignation, with an accompaniment of royal villas in England, vice-clad provinces in Spain, and rows of brown-stone houses in New York, to say nothing of diamonds and stocks to a fabulous amount, is not difficult. The Empress has had all the crown jewels transferred from their usual place of deposit in a large building on the Quai d'Orsay to the vaults of the Bank of France.

AN ENGAGED MARSHAL.

Marshal BAZAGUAY D'HILLIERS has received a shock to his military nervous system from which it is doubtful whether he can possibly recover. The old soldier is seventy-two years of age, and was outraged beyond measure that his inferior in rank, a mere General, should have been nominated Minister of War by the Emperor—a most unheard-of breach of military etiquette—as bewildering to the old gentleman as the idea of a man's being his own grandfather. It is related that, when Gen. PALIKAO presented himself at the entrance of the Chambers, he was not received—not having the password. The Captain of the post could do nothing more, under a strict military law, than conduct the General into the presence of Marshal BAZAGUAY D'HILLIERS, Commander-in-Chief of the army in Paris. The Marshal is reported to have said that his command was absolute, and that he could not therefore yield to the General's wishes.

"If that is all," the General replied, "that prevents you, I relieve you immediately of that command." "I am only too much obliged to you, Monsieur le Ministre," was the answer.

"Marshal," said the Minister, with composure, "I am most happy that the first act of my military power is to be agreeable to you."

Le mot vaut bien le trouver; but what is quite true is, that the old Marshal is in a furious ill-temper, and refuses positively to communicate his plans for the defense of Paris to his successor, Gen. LOUMARIN, although entreated by the Empress herself. His answer is, "I have nothing to do with you; make your own plans."

FORTIFYING PARIS.

The works on the fortifications are being carried on with the greatest expedition. All the sixty-six roads leading into the capital have been cut off, and temporary bridges thrown across them. Six hundred cannons of heavy calibre are already mounted. The octroi for provisions to be stored in the grande d'abondance (city corn magazine) is abolished, and all the bakers are required, by an order of Police received yesterday, to keep on their own premises a sufficient quantity of flour for fifteen days' use. The law provides for three days in ordinary times.

Attack on the Barracks at La Villette by Prussian Emissaries—A Desperate Struggle and Several Persons Shot.

PARIS, Monday, Aug. 15, 1870.

There is an eastern corner of the City of Paris, in a quarter rarely visited by opulent strangers, or even by well-to-do Parisians, where the poorest portion of the German population has been wont for many years past to congregate. There are in this same direction, and immediately contiguous, a cattle market, a slaughter-house, the famous Bâle of Paris, where TRESPMANN, of Alsatian origin, purported his hatchery, and a quantity of dwellings inhabited by sausage-makers, and others whose means of existence are irregular and uncertain. Such are the principal features of a portion of the capital known by the name of La Villette, which is a close neighbor of Belleville, famous of late for the violence of its inhabitants and for the extravagance of its demonstrations in favor of M. ROCHEFORT's republic. Before the enlargement of the limits of Paris, the quarter of La Villette, just alluded to, was outside the city wall, which formed the boundary of the extreme northeastern all around Paris. When that wall was demolished, La Villette, right away to the fortifications, became one great agglomeration of the poorest and most ignorant portion of the population, composed principally of Germans who, like the Irish, usually mean hunger and fraternize in their misery. The Germans, speaking the various languages spoken from the Baltic sea to the Danube in different parts of Paris, but at La Villette it is not much more than half a mile, and at certain intervals military posts or small barracks have been established, with the view of preserving order and insuring safety in the murderous zone of the French capital.

THE ATTACK.

One of these little barracks, not capable of accommodating more than one hundred and fifty men, situated at No. 127 of the Boulevard de La Villette, was the scene of a sudden and altogether unexpected attack, yesterday afternoon (Sunday, Aug. 14,) much about the time that the French soldiers were fighting the Prussians at a short distance from Metz. The post had been occupied for some time by the pompiers, or firemen, who are very justly esteemed as the most valorous portion of the French Army, and are extremely popular. In the day-time, these excellent soldiers are usually dispersed in the interior of Paris, for the service of the theatres, or in the fire-engines, where they now instruct the volunteers in the use of fire-arms. Yesterday afternoon, about 5 o'clock, at the time when the patriotic concert we are about to relate took place, there were only fourteen men left in the barrack, among whom were a Lieutenant and a Corporal. The gate was unprotected, the doors were open, and there was only one sentry on duty, who walked quietly up and down in front of three guns that had been left leaning against the walls of the building. All of a sudden, a band of from sixty to eighty individuals issued from the direction of the outlying portion of La Villette, and as they appeared to be unarmed, they were allowed to pass by the Police Station in the Rue de Tanger without being interfered with. They were supposed to be volunteers proceeding peacefully to the Eastern Railway, and they were led by a little man, very respectably dressed. At the corner of the Boulevard of La Villette, some of the band attempted to wrench the Marseillaise, but the little man ordered them to desist, and they continued their march in silence till they came to the almost empty barracks, where they stopped and shouted "Vive la République!" The Lieutenant on duty immediately came out into the street, having previously called out to his men to load their guns and to fix the bayonets upon them.

"What do you want?" he asked of the individuals who happened to be the nearest.

"We wish to disarm the Reactionaries. Give us your guns, and march with us to the Chamber of Deputies."

Lieut. CORTAMS at once saw that the proposition was serious, and became desirous of obtaining assistance from the neighboring Police Station, which he could only do by gaining a little time. "Oh, no," he said, "we firemen are not soldiers. You know perfectly well that we don't fire upon the people; but it is our duty to march with you. If you desire to proclaim the Republic, go and proclaim it elsewhere."

The leader of the band did not seem to relish this advice, and again demanded the guns to be given up. "Never," replied the Lieutenant. "Then we will take them," retorted the leader.

At the same moment all his men drew forth revolvers, which they had kept hidden, and fired. About twenty balls struck the walls of the barrack. The sentry, whose name was SAUBAIRE, fell dead, having received a ball in the heart; Corp. BARON got three wounds, two from fire-arms, and one from a dagger. The Lieutenant was unscathed.

GENERAL STRUGGLE.

There were but few people on the Boulevard at the time of the outrage, but on the sound of the firing several men hurried out from the neighboring houses, and attacked the rioters, who responded by firing no matter where or upon whom. The Police of the Rue de Tanger had been apprised of what had taken place, and arrived on the spot armed only with their naked swords, which did not stop them in their endeavor to surround the kith of wretches, who got desperate in their efforts to escape. The struggle became at length general, and numerous were the shots that whistled near the ears of the passers-by. A policeman, stricken by a ball in the heart, having made a feeble appeal for help to the crowd, was hot upon by the rioters and literally kicked into eternity. A poor little girl, six years of age, was killed in her mother's arms by a stray bullet; the child merely uttered a sigh and expired. For a while the struggle was furious, and continued amid cries of rage and horror. There was a confusion of men who fell wounded, of others who tried to escape, and of others again who pursued the fugitives. At length the rioters, finding themselves totally unsupported by the populace, who had rallied round the Commissary of Police, retreated as far as the Rue d'Aubervilliers, where, firing their last shot, they endeavored to escape. "Down upon them! down upon them!" cried the people; "they are Prussians. Death to the Prussians!" and the crowd pursued the wretches who, seized with a sudden panic, threw away their arms, and disappeared as fast as they could, either in the houses or neighboring streets. A terrible hunt ensued to the cry of "The Prussians! Down with the Prussians!" And Prussians, in fact, they were, the Prussians of Paris; for although they spoke of the republic and of political matters, there is no party at present in Paris that would accept the assistance of such auxiliaries; moreover, no political party in the world would cover with its responsibility the conduct of such wretched assassins, who fired upon unarmed men, and killed children in cold blood. The crowd could make no mistake. We passed, later in the day, in the quarter of La Villette, and we did not hear the word republic by a single individual. On the contrary, the numerous workmen of a sugar refinery in the Rue de Flandres openly affirmed that they had perfectly recognized the leader of the band, whom they knew to be a Prussian. The people cried out, "Yes, they are Prussians; there is not a Frenchman in France who would do what they have done. They have been paid to do the work with BISMARCK's gold." One cry alone expressed the general sentiment of public indignation: "Vengeance! Down with Prussia!" In spite of the last few shots fired with the view of facilitating their retreat, the populace succeeded in capturing several of the rioters, among others the three who had stolen the three guns that were left outside the barracks. Several were taken also, with their revolvers in their hands, and all the efforts of the Police were insufficient to protect them from the violence of the people, who distributed kicks and blows during a quarter of an hour without mercy. Before reaching the Police Station, most of the prisoners were half killed by the populace, the female portion demanding the immediate death of the rioters, which would have been justified, now that martial law exists in Paris.

CALM RESTORED.

When calm was restored, the bodies of the Police agent and of the sentry were placed upon a stretcher, and carried to the station, escorted by a dense crowd, who showed their sympathy by remaining uncovered till the corpses disappeared from their sight. During several hours, and till night set in, the populace, aiding the Police and making a combined effort against the public enemy, tracked the rioters from point to point. One was caught on the railway bridge, just as he was throwing away his revolver on the line; another was taken because he had badly hidden his pistol-ball beneath his blouse; and a third was picked up crouching behind a gateway. Each arrest was the signal of cries of fury from the crowd, whose passion made itself felt on the prisoners, notwithstanding the efforts of the Police, sword in hand, to protect them. From the beginning of the struggle, the few shops open in the quarter speedily closed; the drums of the National Guard beat to arms; and in a very short time the Guards came and took up their position in front of the firemen's barracks. A detachment of the mounted Garde de Paris also came to the spot; but their officer, who was received with cries of "Down with Prussia!" "Down with the Prussians!" noticed with his men as soon as he found that their further assistance was not needed.

ANOTHER MANIFESTATION.

Another manifestation took place around the column: was that came to fetch the rioters from the Rue de Tanger to the Prefecture; the escorts, with drawn swords, who served as escort, had much trouble in preserving their prisoners from the fury of the crowd. The van was hurriedly driven off, amid cries of "To death! To death! France for ever! Down with the Prussians!"

ARRESTS.

By 10 o'clock last night sixty-two arrests had been made. The prisoners under in the hands of the Police. Among the persons arrested is a fine tall man, who said he was English, but who spoke French with a strong German accent; he was provided with an English passport, and had about him several sovereigns and golden Napoleons. Another young man, the bearer of a Baden passport, who had been seen with the rioters, has been arrested. All the prisoners are in a deplorable state; most of them have their clothes torn, their eyes blackened, and their heads broken. One of them is suffering dreadfully with a broken arm. Revolvers, powder-flasks, ammunition-boxes, coarse iron pistols, and daggers, were found on many of the persons arrested. The poignards which they were armed are terrible weapons, in tempered steel, all of one piece, and about ten inches long; they admit of being used in several ways. The public indignation in Paris this morning on learning the news of the murderous attack at La Villette by persons who were evidently in the pay of Prussians by birth or Prussians at heart, was boundless, and the immediate trial of the prisoners by Court-martial is universally demanded. Paris is in a state of siege; martial law prevails, and the Government is called upon to act energetically and without fear. An example to traitors is required, and the sooner justice is done on the present occasion by the speedy execution of these wretches, the more effective will that example prove as a warning to those whose desires or whose interests might tempt them to similar acts of violence and disorder.

PRESS DEFIANCE.

All the journals of this evening call upon the Government to send the parties captured before the military tribunal.

INVADED FRANCE.

From Spa to Metz—Sad Scenes—The Wounded—The Red Prefecture—Fortifications on Paris—The Chassepot Rifles.

From Our Own Correspondent.

METZ, Saturday, Aug. 6, 1870.

I wrote my last letter from Spa. It is a delightful little place, but to me, drawn into the fever of this dreadful war, it was very dull, and its peaceful pleasures annoying. Thus, though close to the German frontier, it was too far from the scene of conflict. I could have gone to Cologne, Bonn, Coblentz, and perhaps, Rheinfeld; but there were wild rumors of battles on the frontiers along the Saar, and I suddenly packed my traveling bag and started for Luxembourg. It is a savage country on the head waters of the Schelde, and then down those of the Moselle. It reminded me of the hardest hundred miles on the New-York and Erie. We went slowly along a single track railway through wooded hills and narrow valleys, with few houses and little cultivation. Then a Custom-house station, examination of baggage, which in my case, afforded of a curious peep at the slightly furnished wares of a new pair of slippers, and we were in the King of Holland's small dominion of Luxembourg. I do not envy the King his little property. It may very well remain neutral. For the first fifty miles I think we passed through ten tunnels a mile, and the rest in bridges, deep cuttings and embankments. The few houses are stuck into the hills anyhow, every bit of level land along the streams is irrigated, and wheat fields climb up hills so steep I think they must sow them with guns and reap them with ladders.

At last the valley widens to great fertile plains, like those of Belgium, and we come to the strong town, about which the diplomatists of Europe have had so much trouble. And it is very strong, with its heights bristling with fortresses, and its deep sheltered valley. It is somewhat like Quebec. I stayed one night, walked around the fortifications, saw thirty or forty men at work demolishing them in accordance with the treaty of London, and reckon that they might do the job in thirty or forty years, at the rate they are working. They have begun at a good place, where a little demolition will do no harm, and they are in no hurry. The army, which may possibly number five thousand men, is on a war footing. I saw one solid-looking regiment, and they mean to protect their neutrality or perish in the attempt.

EN ROUTE TO METZ.

I thought I should stay several days at Luxembourg, but the town was full of a story of a great battle at Wissembourg, a little French village about twenty miles from the Rhine, on the frontier of Rhenish Bavaria. The Prussians had invaded France and taken this place after a sharp action, in payment for the little affair in which the Emperor made the first real trial of his new engines of slaughter at Saarbrück. And so, wishing to know more about it, I pushed on to Metz, the headquarters of the army. In cross

THE CHURCHES IN SUMMER.

Attendance at Public Worship, Yesterday, in This City.

The Effect of Fashion on Religion—Ought the Churches to be Closed During the Summer—The Suspension of the Sanctuaries in the Autumn.

The return of cool weather will have the effect of reopening the fashionable churches of the City, which have been closed throughout the Summer season. It seems to be taken for granted among the richer portions of our religious community, that as soon as the thermometer marks an upward tendency it is right and proper that the edifices devoted to religion—those at least of more pretentious character—should be shut against all comers; and such is desire to unite in public worship therein are practically told to go elsewhere, or to confine their devotions within the precincts of their own chambers. This rule does not apply, however, to such churches as are frequented by those who move in the humbler walks of life, whereby, during the hottest Sundays of the Summer solstice, there have been preaching and services of prayer, praise and thanksgiving. It is true that, on many Sabbaths, the congregations were smaller than usual in point of numbers, for the poorest among our people will manage, when the sun's rays are blistering hot, to "steal awhile away" from the vast aggregation of bricks and mortar known as the Metropolis; but in all of these there were, nevertheless, religious services on each recurring Sunday. If the sightseeing pastor found it absolutely necessary, in order to recuperate his energies for spiritual work, to take a vacation or a few weeks in some rural locality, he generally found means to supply his pulpit during his absence; and, when he left his flock, it was with the confident assurance that their spiritual wants would be duly ministered to. The churches were not "closed for the season," after the manner of our theatrical houses, but were left open to dispense Gospel instruction freely to all who chose to take advantage of the opportunity for acquiring it. There have been, during the Summer now about to close, some notable exceptions to the rule which generally obtained among the richer churches. Among these may be mentioned the Brick (Presbyterian) Church, (Rev. GARDINER SPRING'S,) in Fifth-avenue, in which, during the entire season, services have been held without the intermission of a single Sabbath. The same may be said of Rev. H. D. NORTHUP'S church in West Twenty-third-street, and of a few others, which have been opened every Sunday.

EPISCOPAL CHURCHES AN EXCEPTION.

The Episcopal denomination discard in toto the custom of closing churches in Summer, and all their houses of worship have been opened this season, as usual, on Sunday, except in a few instances, where it was found necessary to close the edifice for needed repairs and alterations. The consequence has been that the congregations in these have been very large, and the ministry have not only found interested auditors listening to their pulpit discourses, but numbers of those who are not of their particular faith have joined them in the form of worship prescribed by the Book of Common Prayer. The success which has attended this course of procedure on the part of the Episcopalians, is proof positive that a larger proportion of our people than is generally supposed are religiously inclined.

ATTENDANCE YESTERDAY.

In hallowed old Trinity, yesterday, for instance, every seat was filled, though it was plainly observable to the practiced eye that fully one-third of the congregation was made up of those who are not professed adherents to the Episcopal form of worship. In St. Paul's, Broadway, and in St. John's, Varick-street, there were, also, large congregations. These churches are far down town, and are not in populous neighborhoods, being surrounded by business places rather than residences, and yet one would have supposed just the contrary, had he entered any of them during the hours of divine service. The same numerous attendance of worshipers was yesterday noticeable also in St. Alban's, Forty-second-street, and in other Episcopal churches in town; though it is to be expected that these, being in residence localities, should have larger congregations than such as are situated in the purely business portions of the City.

THE WEALTHY ABSENT.

These congregations were not made up of the wealthy either. By far the majority of the worshipers were people in middling circumstances, apparently—such as cannot afford to spend a whole Summer at the fashionable watering-places in the interior, or at the sea-side resorts—and some were evidently poor workmen and poor women who are dependent on daily labor for their daily bread. All this goes to show that the poorer classes may be reached by religious influences, if the proper means are employed for the purpose; but the custom of closing the churches in Summer simply because some of the regular attendants are able to spend a whole season at the Springs, or elsewhere, indulging in the fashionable frivolities of watering-place life, is not the best way to make them feel that, though poor in this world's goods, they have an equal heritage in heavely happiness with their more favored fellow-men; and that, though the latter may dispense with religious services for a season, they have a right to them all the year round.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCHES OPEN.

The Catholic churches were, as usual, filled yesterday. Congregation after congregation came and went, as the morning masses, (of which there are generally four or five every Sunday,) were successively celebrated. The Catholics do not countenance such a thing as closing the church "for the season." So far as they are concerned, they demand the same facilities for public worship in all seasons of the year, and they would be taken all aback with surprise and wonderment were their pastors to announce that, because of the advent of Summer, there would be no services until the "heated term" had passed and gone. With them (as with the Episcopalians,) "worship" is the chief feature of the Sunday gathering. Preaching they hold to be a useful and proper addendum, but not the essence of, nor the main thing appertaining to, religious service. Consequently, their churches present the same general appearance in Summer as in Winter; and as the rule which requires every Catholic, wherever he may be, if possible, to attend at mass on Sunday under pain of mortal sin, is imperative on high and low, rich and poor alike, the congregations never show any very marked diminution, no matter what the season or the state of the weather may be.

BEGINNING OF THE CHURCHES.

The advent of Autumn, and its accompanying cool weather will soon bring back the large numbers of people who have been summering at Saratoga, Newport, Niagara and elsewhere, and in two weeks' time we may expect to see even our fashionable churches thrown open for public worship. It is to be hoped that the preachers who have spent the hot season in rural enjoyments may return to us reinvigorated in health, and more determined that ever to oppose the "sword of the spirit" to the "world, the flesh and the devil." Such of them as have witnessed the fashionable frivolities of the noted Summer resorts might with great propriety remind their congregations that the possession of great wealth ought not to be the great end and aim of existence by preaching their first discourse from the text, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity."

Burglars Arrested—Operations on a Large Scale.

Early on Saturday morning Detective FIELD, of the Fifth Precinct, noticed WILLIAM KELLER and WILLIAM JOHNSON, two well-known burglars, in close conversation at the corner of Greenwich and Duane streets, so he arrested them. JOHNSON had a jimmy sixteen inches in length in his possession, and the detective ascertained on examination that several of the store-doors in the vicinity had been tampered with, and that a decided effort had been made to force an entrance into the store of Messrs. STRAHAN & FLOYD at No. 325 Duane-street, situated only a few steps from the spot where Mr. FIELD made his arrest. The jimmy corresponded exactly with the marks on the lock, bolt and bar, bent and twisted, was also found in the lock. Both of the thieves were taken to the Leonard-street Police Station and locked up, and the detective afterward ascertained that the accused broke into the store of BUHN & Co., grocers, at No. 325 Greenwich-street, by opening the door, and broke open the safe with wedges, and carried off $140 in currency and United States bonds, and $600 worth of silver marked "C. S." belonging presumably to Mrs. WM. P. BOOMS, wife of one of the partners. Mr. BOOMS saw KELLER in the premises several times prior to the robbery, and on one occasion the door-lock was discovered to have been tampered with. On Thursday last the store of Messrs. SCHUYLER & ADAMS at No. 42 Jayne-street, was broken into by the accused, who stole two half chests of tea, valued at $40, and sold it to CHAS. DEBKER, of No. 42 Waite-street, for about half its real value. This fact led to the arrest of DEBKER as a receiver of stolen goods, and the overwhelming evidence accumulated by the indefatigable detective induced the prisoners, JOHNSON and KELLER, to confess their guilt. All of the accused were yesterday arraigned, before Justice HOGAN, at the Tombs, and fully committed for trial in default of $2,000 bail each. JOHNSON was arrested and tried in 1869 for burglary, and served five years in the State Prison, and KELLER has been out of the penitentiary only six weeks, having been sent there for larceny. There is never a slight prospect that Mrs. BOOMS will recover her valuable property.

PROTESTANTS IN CATHOLIC LANDS.

Their Rights, Religious and Educational, in Roman Catholic Countries—Discourse by Rev. Geene Hodge, at the Chelsea M. E. Church, on West Thirty-sixth-street.

Rev. OSCAR HUDD, a Hungarian exile and recently a Colonel in the Federal Army, discoursed, yesterday morning, at the Methodist Episcopal Church, West Thirty-sixth-street, between Eighth and Ninth avenues, on "Protestant Rights, Religious and Educational, in Roman Catholic Countries." He selected as his text the words, "But the Word of God is not bound." Timothy, ii., 9, and proceeded to observe that despite the innumerable persecutions waged against the Church and the martyrdom of millions of her children, the Gospel of Christ was today proclaimed in every part of the world. He admitted that in bygone years there were many countries in which the Bible was not freely preached and where men calling themselves Christians used every endeavor to prevent its free circulation. Take, for example, the estates of the Church of Rome, called the Papal City, as it is termed, and it is seen that since the proclamation of the venerable father who calls himself the successor of St. Peter and the vicar of Christ, in 1435 became the absolute spiritual and temporal ruler, the Gospel of Purity was forbidden to be preached on Roman soil. He instanced the expulsion of a Protestant minister from the Papal Dominions, three years since, for daring to hold service in a private American family resident in Rome, and continued to remark that in the northern portions of Italy, where the inhabitants preached the Gospel, they were persecuted like wild beasts, and like them had no homes or resting-places. Protestants in Austria, religious, educational or social, which the priests of the Catholic faith were obliged to respect. So it was in Spain for ages and ages. Protestants were persecuted when living with undying hatred and when death were denied the rights of burial. So it was in France and every Roman Catholic country, and yet with the new light of such facts the Catholics of this country have raised a cry for the expulsion of the Bible from our American public schools, on the ground that it is against their conscience to permit it to be read by their children because of its sectarian character. He denied that it was sectarian. It was the Book of Life—the Word of God, and there was no difference between it and the Latin version, with the exception of notes and comments. But the main object of their protest was to destroy the free schools, destroy the free circulation of the Bible and place Catholicity in power in this country. Both admitting it was sectarian, what of that? This was a Protestant country, and in reply to their demand he returned the answer of a Catholic priest under somewhat similar circumstances: "If our institutions do not suit you, you have the remedy in your hands." Referred to the treatment by Catholic Austria, in response to an appeal for the modification of the Concordat, (an ecclesiastical treaty between Rome and all Catholic countries,) of nine millions of people of Hungary, to show the injustice of their demand by reason of contrast with their own treatment. Addressing himself directly all Protestant educational institutions were taken from the Hungarians and placed in the hands of priests, who assumed the teaching of their children in temporal as well as religious matters. He recited several cases of persecution practiced by the Austrian authorities to break the spirit of the people, and to force them to the shrine of the principles of Protestant teaching and induce them to conform to those of Rome. He also entered largely into an account of the Hungarian revolution of 1848, subsequently the establishment of a Republic, its subjugation again under Austrian rule, and the persecution and expulsion of Protestant ministers. By the battle of Sadowa in 1866, she was again restored to her ancient institutions by the triumph of Protestantism over Catholicity. And in this great struggle which is now going on between the mighty armies of Germany and the tyrant priestly supporters of France, this war of Protestantism and Catholicity, great results to the Gospel of Christ would follow the consequence. He recited an incident of the battle of Sadowa, related to him by a spectator, which, to shine, at least, fully accounted for the success of the German arms. Passing over the field after the battle, he observed that while the Austrian soldiers had carried in their knapsacks brandy, dice and other evidences of drunkenness the German soldiers carried with them as part of their equipment the Bible and a copy of the New Testament. The Bible was the banner of Protestant liberty, the enlightener of its people, and the Austrians, in their attachment to Catholic priests was over directed. To the fulfillment of that spirit could be traced their war against the exclusion from our public schools, and not only needed injury to their conscience on account of its sectarian nature. This was a Protestant country. Its institutions were created for the preservation of Protestant interests, its national faith was founded on the Bible, and we would be an insult to the principles of liberty handed down to us by our revolutionary fathers if we discarded it at the voice of the Jesuitical power which has crept into the land. He had not counsel to extend to his Catholic fellow-citizens. They were at perfect liberty to worship God after their own faith, and build up edifices for religious purposes; but when they raised a cry for the expulsion of the sacred Book from the education of their children, they waged a war of religion against religion, and they should be prepared to bear the consequences.

CRIMES AND CASUALTIES.

Sudden Deaths—Two Men Stabbed—A Quarrelsome Wife—Supposed Suicide—Minor Offenses and Accidents.

The Police recovered the body of an unknown woman from the North River, near Pier No. 11. As the remains were still warm an effort was made to resuscitate them, without success, however. It is supposed that the deceased committed suicide. The body was sent to the Morgue for identification and inquest. A permit from the Commissioners of Charities, bearing the name of "ANNA HALL," was found on the body.

JOHN CARRIE, aged nineteen, died at Bellevue Hospital yesterday from the effects of a fall from a scaffold in Eighty-sixth-street, near Third-avenue.

The following sudden deaths were reported yesterday to the Coroners: MARIA CLARK, aged thirty, a native of England, at No. 66 Centre-street; THOMAS DOOLEY, aged forty-two, and a native of Ireland, of No. 26 Henry-street, expired while sitting in a barber's shop, at No. 34 Henry-street; JAMES O'NEAL, at No. 255 Mott-street; GEORGE BRIEL, at No. 720 West Fortieth-street; JOHN ROBINSON, a passenger on board the steamship Virginia, from Galveston, Texas, is supposed to have a mother residing at Pottsville, Penn.

LOUISA WEAVER, of No. 49 Christopher-street, was arraigned before Justice HOGAN, yesterday, charging she had stolen $100 in money from JOHN Gabert, of No. 72 Greenstreet, Jersey City. The complainant was in the prisoner's company on Saturday night, and missed his money just after leaving her.

ROSANNA SCHAEFER, ANNIE SMITH and SOPHIA HAWKE, inmates of the premises No. 450 Pearl-street, were arrested yesterday at the instance of WASHINGTON IRVING, of No. 39 Park-row, who informed Justice HOGAN that the women had robbed him of $75 while he was in their apartment. Mr. IRVING refused to make any complaint, however, so the accused were released.

JOHN WILLIAMS, a German, of No. 341 West Thirty-second-street, had a foot crushed yesterday by a piece of timber falling upon him at the foot of West Thirty-seventh-street.

MICHAEL SHORT had both legs fractured by a kick from his horse in a stable at his residence, No. 221 West Forty-second-street.

ELLEN MCMANUS, while intoxicated yesterday, fell from a third-story window of her residence, No. 26 West Broadway, and sustained dangerous injuries.

Yesterday morning, while CORNELIUS MCCARTY, of No. 36 Roosevelt-street, was conversing with a friend in the New Bowery, ANN WHELAN, a disreputable woman, approached him and stabbed him in the back with a penknife, the wound not being a dangerous one. ANN was arrested, but would not explain her motive. She was arraigned before Justice HOGAN, at the Tombs, and fully committed.

ANDREW MCCLELLAN, of No. 448 Tenth-avenue, had a quarrel with an unknown man who was intoxicated, when he was stabbed in the right arm. The unknown made good his escape.

TIMOTHY VAUGHAN quarrelled with his wife MARY, yesterday, at their residence, No. 603 Third-avenue, when the wife became enraged and threw a Kerosene lamp at TIMOTHY, striking him in the face and causing a severe wound. MARY was arrested and locked up for examination.

MORRIS BERESSING, a member of the sneak-thief fraternity, was yesterday committed by Justice KOCH, in the Yorkville Police Court, on a charge of stealing a suit of men's clothes, of the value of $25, from the store of ISAAC PLATZ, No. 216 Sixth-avenue, on Saturday night, between 10 and 11 o'clock.

The Brooklyn Homicide—Additional Particulars.

The thief who was shot on Saturday by Officer COWAN has been identified by Bernard SMITH, of the Fourth Precinct, who says that he arrested him in 1867 for burglary, at which time he gave the name of ROBERT MALLOY. Before being brought to trial, however, for the crime mentioned, MALLOY succeeded in escaping from the cell in which he was confined. Something after that occurrence he got into another scrape, and was sent to Blackwell's Island. After serving out his term he was transferred to the hands of the Brooklyn authorities, who tried him on the original charge, and sent him to the State Prison for two years. He could not, therefore, have been long out of confinement when the affair of Saturday occurred. Yesterday, TAMONEY, a boy residing at the corner of Catharine and Marion streets, New-York, identified some clothing pawned by the deceased, which, he alleges, MALLOY stole from him on Saturday morning.

Murderous Assault on an Officer.

HENRY MARTIN, a powerful and villainous-looking rough, was arraigned in the Yorkville Police Court, Yesterday, charged by Officer BURKHAM, of the Eighteenth Precinct, with committing a murderous assault upon him with a weapon known as a "sinch," in Eighty-third-street, on Saturday night. MARTIN was behaving in a disorderly manner, and the officer told him to move on, whereupon he "sinched" and struck him on the arm, shattering it between the wrist and elbow. He then struck him several times about the body, injuring him severely. The ruffian was committed to answer in default of bail in $1,000.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE WAR.

Prussian scouts have appeared at Meaux, within twenty-five miles of Paris. The Paris Constitutionnel says the Army of the Prince Royal, reinforced by that of Prince FREDERICK WILLIAM, is marching through the Valleys of the Aube and Seine on Paris. It points out that the distance from Paris to Sierck, the nearest point on the German frontier, is a hundred leagues, and this line they have to defend in order to keep their communications complete. The 600,000 Prussians invading France must extend their lines vastly, a necessity which proved so fatal to the French in the beginning of the campaign, and the revenge of the French, the Constitutionnel says, is near. The Figaro says the French are invited to impede the invaders by blowing up bridges, cutting railways, blocking roads, killing scouts, and harassing them in flank and rear. The enemy may thus be delayed in arrival at Paris for fifteen days, should the opposition be very great, otherwise he may appear in six days. The Opinion Nationale denies the statement that the Landwehr are not in the field, and proceeds to prove it, and concludes by saying that Prussia is making her final effort. La Presse says the announcement in the Chambers of the advance of the Prussians was received without astonishment or fear in the capital. Commenting on the Prussian strategy, it calls attention to the reception which the "obstinate old man" may expect in Germany, should he return without the million of men whom he brought into France. All Germany would scorn and curse King WILLIAM should he not make a supreme effort to dictate a peace in Paris. REUTER's telegrams in the London papers say the siege of Paris is deemed inevitable; that the Government prefers a siege to a pitched battle. According to these dispatches, the Paris journals say the advance of the Crown Prince is fatal to the Prussian campaign. The forts about Paris have been armed, garrisoned and provisioned. A suggestion is made to remove the seat of Government to Lyons, and a Paris dispatch says that the Government officials, except the Ministers, will go to Tours, Bourges and Lyons to administer the uninvaded Provinces. In the Corps Legislatif on Saturday the success at Verdun was officially announced. The measure calling into service married men who had already served in the army was rejected. M. THIERS said he first learned of his appointment as a member of the Committee of Defense from the Journal Officiel. He accepted through devotion to the country, but he must have the support of the Chamber. The President then stated that the entire Chamber accepted the appointment of M. THIERS. ...In the Senate, on Saturday, a Senator declared that had the people of Alsace and Lorraine been armed the Prussians would not have crossed the Vosges.

A Paris dispatch says McMAHON's main force is at Stenay, the Emperor is at Harmonville, and the Prince Imperial at Rethel. The Prussian reconnoissances have been pushed as far as Montmédy. La Liberté says a General of the Army of the Rhine held an interview with the Empress yesterday, and set out on his return immediately afterward. That journal also says that a "brilliant combat" may be looked for in a day or two. A person who saw the Emperor on the 26th asserts that BAZAINE and McMAHON are near each other. A dispatch from Arlon via Brussels says Longwy has been summoned to surrender by the Germans, but the French refused. A Mézieres telegram of the 27th reports the Prussians falling back before the Franc-Tireurs and the peasants toward Dun. An official dispatch from Bar-le-Duc on Friday night, by way of London, yesterday, says the French garrison of Vitry surrendered on Thursday morning, the Prussians taking sixteen guns and 950 prisoners. The Prussian cavalry had annihilated two battalions of the Garde Mobile. Official news published in Paris on Saturday night says that on the 25th inst. the Prussians, 10,000 strong, under the Crown Prince of SAXONY, had been repulsed in an attack on Verdun, after a combat of three hours and considerable loss. The National Guard served the French guns. The same dispatch says an ambulance train was fired into by the Prussians, and two persons belonging to it killed; also, that the advance of the Germans along the Aube had been checked, they having fallen back to St. Dizier. The capitulation of BAZAINE for want of supplies is expected, according to a Paris dispatch by way of Brussels. A Washington dispatch says the French Minister has represented, by way of protest, that the North German Legation, or persons by their authority, have been engaging Surgeons for the Prussian Army. The German Minister denies this. The dispatch says both foreign representatives have scrupulously avoided infractions of our Neutrality Laws, and the Administration will strictly enforce the principles laid down in the President's proclamation.

WM. COHEN, aged six years, fell from a fourth-story window, yesterday, at No. 117 Orchard-street, and was severely injured.

The Advance Upon Paris.

On Thursday last each of the Powers now at war gained a success. A portion of the Prussian forces, under the command of the Crown Prince of Saxony, made an attack upon Verdun, and were repulsed with considerable loss, after three hours' hard fighting. The loss sustained by the French is said to have been inconsiderable. On the other hand, the Prussians succeeded in defeating the garrison at Vitry, with great loss to the French and little loss to themselves. These are the only engagements of which we have anything like positive information. The capture of Verdun would have been of some importance to the Prussians, and it is not improbable that the attack will be renewed. The loss of the French at Vitry scarcely makes their position much worse than it was before.

The attention of the world is now chiefly fixed on the march of the Crown Prince to Paris, as being by far the most dramatic, and also the most momentous, event of the war. Upon the result of that movement almost everything may turn. We are inclined to discredit the report that the advance upon Paris was ordered by King WILLIAM in opposition to the advice of all his Generals. It is far more probable that it formed a distinct part of the plan originally laid down by von MOLTKE. No matter who may have originated it the fact is very obvious that the movement is as hazardous as it is bold. If a reverse befell the Crown Prince before the walls of Paris, it is difficult to see how he could extricate his army from the extreme dangers of its position. The great question is whether there is any chance of such a reverse happening? Where are the troops to deal with the immense army which the Prince now has with him? Gen. TROCHU may possibly have made better arrangements than we are aware of, and the dispatches of our correspondent at Paris bid us anticipate startling consequences from the activity which has lately been displayed in the capital. But we have not yet been told that even proper arms are available for the defenders of Paris. The position is very much the same as it was in this month of August, 1792—and, by a coincidence of history, on this very same day of the month. "For the present," writes CARLYLE, in his immortal history of the French Revolution, "our citoyens chant chorally To Arms; and have no arms! Arms are searched for; passionately; there is joy over any musket. Meanwhile railings are torn up; hammered into pikes; chains themselves shall be welded together into pikes. The very coffins of the dead are raised for melting into balls. All church bells must down into the furnace to make cannon; all church plate into the mint to make money."

All this, however, took place under a Republic. Now, France is under an Empire for which large numbers of the young men will not fight, and it might be dangerous to put arms in the hands of all the citizens of Paris, even if arms could be found. Internecine difficulties are all in favor of the invaders. If the Emperor had quietly taken himself out of the way—had announced his abdication, while still offering himself as a soldier to the nation—it would have been better for France, and perhaps also for himself, in the end. Everywhere the people could then have made common cause against the enemy. As it is, thousands of the bravest and strongest will not voluntarily fight for the Emperor. Possibly the actual presence of the Prussians before Paris may evoke a different feeling, and arouse all the patriotism of the people. This we regard as one of the great dangers incidental to the movement of the Crown Prince. It is almost inconceivable that any considerable party in France would be willing to open the gates of Paris to the Prussians, merely for the sake of showing their hostility to NAPOLEON. That would be an act of treason to their country which could scarcely help them to power when the present troubles are ended. The arrival of the Crown Prince at Paris may be the signal for a general truce among all sections of parties, just as the appearance of the French on the Rhenish frontier united all Germany, and made minor States sink their differences. NAPOLEON calculated on the support of some of the South German States, which had no kindly feelings toward Prussia. He was mistaken. BISMARCK has almost certainly reckoned upon a revolution in Paris upon the appearance there of a Prussian army. It is impossible to decide positively at this moment whether he, on his part, has not misunderstood the temper of the French people. When one's country is in jeopardy from a foreign foe, the ordinary tendency of mankind is first to beat back the foe, and settle domestic quarrels afterward. It is quite clear, at any rate, that the French people are gradually getting their blood up. If the country rises behind the invading armies, the fortunes of the campaign may take a decided change. The following significant passage will be found among to-day's news: "The Prussians are retreating before the Franc-tireurs and the peasants, from Stenay to Dun." The advance upon Paris will test the feeling of the nation, and upon that movement, therefore, more depends than upon any other of which we have thus far heard.

The Democratic Position.

The words of good old Isaac will probably express the prevailing judgment when the Democratic Party has yielded to the solicitations of its more prudent managers, and assumed the attitude of conciliation and compromise. "The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau." The tone adopted for the campaign may be moderate enough, but beneath and behind all will be the facts which must necessarily render the party unacceptable to those who have made the peace and integrity of the Union superior to all other considerations.

The earnestness with which leading organs of the party are striving to convince the extremists of the profitableness of moderation, is an acknowledgment of the activity and strength of the violent, unyielding section. It is a confession that the party, as a party, does not acquiesce in the results of war and reconstruction. When the World addresses appeal after appeal to its Southern friends—always apologetically, be it remembered, as though conscious of the tendency to reject conciliatory counsels as treason to the party—it in effect declares that a very considerable element is linked with the extremists. And when the Louisville Courier-Journal fights, as it has fought, a plucky battle for months to restrain the ultraisms of the Kentucky Democracy, it thereby concedes the truth of all that has been said in regard to the obstinate temper of the party where it is absolute master of a State. Argument is not required to prove the unchanged and intractable nature of the party. These attempts to induce the acceptance of the new order of things, are prima facie evidence that that acceptance has not yet taken place. There is submission only,—not acquiescence. And wherever the party is sufficiently powerful to be able to display its real character, without reference to local consequences—as in Kentucky—it scorns concealment of its purposes. It takes pains to convince the people that compliance with law does not always imply acceptance of the law as an expression of the national policy,—still less any respect for the enacting authority.

Suppose, then, the wiser guides of the party succeed in their efforts to hold in check the extremists, what will be the practical value of the new position? Admitting that in the contest for supremacy within the party lines, conciliation triumph over implacable hostility in the construction of platforms, what effect may the circumstance be expected to exercise upon the popular vote? The answer altogether depends upon the shape in which the result appears. If, for instance, the advocates of acquiescence commit the Democracy, in unmistakable terms to the continuance of the policy they have hitherto assailed, the dividing line between Democrats and Republicans will be greatly narrowed. Even an implied pledge to abide by reconstruction and its legislative consequences, and to accept as binding and complete the recent constitutional amendments, would be so gratifying a contrast to the disorganizing menace which led to FRANK BLAIR's nomination in 1868, that Republicans would be constrained to recognize the difference in the conduct of the canvass. It is noteworthy, however, that the most moderate of the Democratic journals have not reached this stage in the path of conciliation, and that not a single Democratic platform which has yet been adopted has a word which, by the freest construction, can be interpreted as acquiescence, in the only sense that is of the slightest utility. There may be no declaration of war against reconstruction per se, or against negro suffrage; but on the other hand, there are in the more temperate of the platforms allusions which leave no doubt as to the presence of a hostile feeling toward both. This, probably, is all that the professed promoters of acquiescence can hope to accomplish. They may artfully soften the voice of the Democracy, but, judging from what has already been effected, they lack power so to control the policy of the party as to identify it with the maintenance of reconstruction.

We conclude, therefore, that even if moderate advice prevail in Democratic management, the party will still be obnoxious to the prevalent union sentiment which has been the life of the Republican Party. The most that can be said is that the Democracy are less defiant and less insane than extreme leaders would have them be. That is all. The old feeling may be restrained for appearance sake, but it will exist, and be not the leastdangerous bulwark against justice and progress.

Mormon Affairs.

The Mormon platform fairly sketched by the highest authority is not by any means a new thing. In fact, the most remarkable feature about the demands of the community at Salt Lake is their authenticity. "Liberty, freedom, and equal rights," is BRIGHAM YOUNG's comprehensive, though somewhat pleonastic mode of summarizing them—a preface, however, which scarcely does justice to the proposals with which the speaker follows it up. On the occasion of the recent pioneer celebration at Salt Lake City, the Mormon President made an address, of which it may be said that its statement of general principles is perfectly unexceptionable, while its enunciation of details is exceedingly open to question. It is characterized throughout by the same odd mixture of shrewd common sense, blatant braggadocio, and open, undisguised contempt for the authority under which he lives, which distinguish most of the public utterances of the remarkable man who is the present autocrat of Mormonland. The spokesman of the Latter-day Saints skillfully puts in the foreground of his declaration a reference to the undoubted industrial triumphs which his followers have achieved in the Salt Lake Valley. In claiming for them the privilege of continuing their work of making the desert blossom as the rose, and of elevating the outcast and the destitute, BRIGHAM YOUNG must have known very well that he was demanding a right which nobody has ever questioned; but in asking Congress to pass an impossible law before consenting to obey a law already in existence, he must have been equally aware that he was violating one of the first principles of an organized State. Were the Government of the United States to decree, as the Mormon apostle desires, "that every man that is capable of taking care of himself shall marry a wife," it might indeed earn the gratitude of universal spinsterhood, but it would transcend its functions as completely as its accuser does, by giving every man the liberty of marrying as many wives as he pleases. BRIGHAM YOUNG may honestly believe that polygamy is the one sovereign specific for the evils of society, but the Government under which he lives has enacted certain statutes with which this means of reform is perfectly incompatible, and so long as he and his followers choose to continue citizens of this Republic, they must recognize the fact that obedience is the first law of civilized communities.

An equally dangerous development of Mormonism appears in the Prophet's reference to the mode of conducting popular elections. He says in effect, I hold myself the supreme judge of who are and who are not fit to hold office in your courts and local boards. I do not presume to dictate whom you shall choose, but I shall certainly see that you select no one who is not acceptable to me. This attitude of the Mormon leaders, and the disposition that comes from it on the part of their followers to vote as one man, have already been productive of civil broils in Iowa and Missouri, and will be so again the moment that they are surrounded by a Gentile community numerous enough to have their liberty imperiled by tactics so foreign to our free institutions. The Mormonism of Salt Lake is in its political aspect the unchanged Mormonism of Nauvoo—it is a despotism growing up in the midst of a free State, an autocracy confronting a society where the will of the people is supreme. A strong personal government may be a desirable thing enough for certain stages of social growth, but in the United States it is an anachronism and a social anomaly. Even so acute a thinker as CARLYLE was betrayed into premature admiration of the wonderful social order established by the Jesuit Missionaries among the Indian races of Paraguay, just as other thinkers rather less acute have seen nothing but what is admirable in the civilization of Salt Lake. We have seen the historical retribution of the unlimited and helpless state of submission to which the Paraguayans were reduced in their becoming the dupes of a tyrant like LOPEZ, and an unchecked development of the principles of Mormon absolutism would infallibly pave the way for an unprincipled and reckless adventurer, who would prepare for us another heritage of civil strife and long-enduring hatred.

Campaign Work.

In planning the practical work of the approaching campaign, it is to be hoped that the Republican managers will lose no time in preparing to carry out the provisions of the recent act of Congress, amending the Naturalization laws. No better evidence is needed of the importance of doing this, than is afforded by the desperate expedients which have been suggested for evading the law. We trust, therefore, that the subject will be properly attended to, and that a practical plan of operations will be devised without needless delay, so that no opportunity may be lost of taking the necessary steps for enforcing the law in all the cities of the State.

The most important provision of the act, at least so far as the City of New-York is concerned, is that which provides that the United States Circuit Courts shall, on the application of two citizens, appoint two inspectors of election for each election district, one from each political party. They shall be resident citizens of the district, and be authorized to attend during the registration of voters and at all elections at which Representatives in Congress are to be chosen. The persons so appointed shall also be present during the counting of the ballots, and shall have the right to sign the returns and affix thereto, if they desire, a statement touching the truth or falsity thereof. Any act hindering or molesting such Inspectors is declared a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment for not less than a year. The act also provides that the United States Marshals may appoint as many special deputies as may be necessary to preserve order at any election, and to arrest persons when they shall be committing any offense or breach of the peace.

The foregoing provisions apply to all cities containing over twenty thousand inhabitants, and if they were fearlessly and faithfully enforced, there would be a very fair probability of our carrying the State in November. Those who are familiar with the routine by which elections have hitherto been carried on in this City, will see why the Democrats are in a state of alarm at the prospect that the law will be enforced. It provides a most effectual remedy for the evil which has so long prevailed, and against which it has hitherto seemed hopeless to contend. Vigorous organized action under the law is all that is now needed to insure an honest election.

The undertaking is one requiring prudent management, and involving considerable time and attention in order to insure success. To avoid the corrupting power of Tammany, the utmost care is necessary in the selection of the Inspectors. They should be agreed upon after general consultation, and only upon the distinct assurance that they will serve. They must then be protected in the performance of their duties. The best men whose services can be obtained should be selected—men of integrity and standing in the several districts. There should be no ground for any suspicion of unfairness toward our opponents, or of any double dealing toward ourselves. All that the Republican Party ask is an honest election, and if they can succeed in getting that, they can carry the State. They can get it if the law is rigidly enforced, and we call upon those in whose hands the active management of the canvass is intrusted to see that this condition is attended to.

Massachusetts Politics.

The indications are that the Fall campaign in Massachusetts will be more than usually complicated, and that there may be four tickets put in nomination. WENDELL PHILLIPS—whose boast it is that he has never voted—is the first in the field, defying all comers, and asking the suffrages of the people as the champion of Prohibition. The Boston Transcript says he is the most unique candidate for Governor ever presented to the people of Massachusetts, but that he will receive a vote which will render a strong effort necessary upon the part of the Republicans, from whom he will chiefly draw his support. Last year the State gave a little over 24,000 Republican majority, in an aggregate vote of 124,000. Mr. PHILLIPS may therefore succeed in electing a Democratic Governor, while there is a very slight prospect of his own election.

The Labor Reform organization, which is very strong in Massachusetts, will probably present a full ticket, but in case it should not its strength will be divided between the Prohibitionists and Republicans, very few Democrats belonging to it. As yet no steps have been taken toward opening the campaign by either the Democrats or Republicans. Mr. PHILLIPS, just at present, receives the undivided attention of the leading journals of both parties. The Republican Party is so strong in Massachusetts that it is careless of discipline, and is liable to waste its energies upon local and abstract issues. It seems to require a political emergency to rouse it to an assertion of its power; at other times it is too apt to be indifferent to success. It remains to be seen if the managers can organize a brilliant campaign this year. It is important that they should do so, for with all the disturbing elements in the field, there is danger that the Republican majority may be seriously impaired. There is no telling how large a vote Mr. PHILLIPS may poll. It is his first appearance as a candidate, and there are no means of judging of his popularity. None but Republicans will vote for him; it would be almost ludicrous to suppose that a Democrat could, by any possibility, be induced to vote for so notorious a Radical. There is good reason for our Republican friends in the Bay State to rouse themselves, and organize a vigorous campaign without further loss of time.

Travelers' Delights.

The tribulations of New-York in respect to facilities for travel are manifold, and the voice of complaint about them is never silent. It is especially hard that while the means of locomotion are so few, a class of people should be able to lessen the comfort and safety of those which are in existence. Robbery in these conveyances seems almost a part of the system. The number of drunken people who are allowed to travel in them, to the annoyance and disgust of sober passengers, is astonishing, especially late at night. And then, there are the cheerful beings who select the City railroads as battle-grounds, and settle private grievances while journeying along.

The chosen arenas for fierce and sanguinary fights appear to be picnic grounds and picnic steamers. A number of men, women, and children endeavor to snatch a brief respite from toil and trouble by a visit to some place of rural or marine popular resort. If the day passes without bloodshed, the occasion is exceptional. Either a quarrel among the excursionists themselves leads to blows, and those to pistol-shots and stabs, or a gang of rowdies force themselves upon the party with the distinct purpose of committing robbery and violence. No punishment seems to follow these occurrences. The terrified women and children reach the end of the journey glad to have escaped, and the combatants depart with scarce a show of interference. And all these evils are evidently on the increase. We never remember a season of out-door excursions in which outrages of the sort were so common or so little noticed by the authorities. The result is that most poor people prefer to stay at home. Many of them must travel every day by ferry-boats, and upon these boats fighting is too frequent. They will not incur further risk under the idea of seeking pleasure.

There are other miseries of travel which need but brief allusion. The population of cushioned cars which confines its activity to inroads upon poor humanity, is one form of these miseries. What lady who reads a ferry notice of "no smoking this side the boat," but shudders at the clouds which a score of men and boys are puffing forth, and which drift through the ladies' cabin in defiance of regulation? How charming are the actions of the "genis" who chew tobacco, and spatter the decks with filth. Elevating to the morals and social tone is the vociferous argumentation of carmen and expressmen and other men on deck, whose rhetoric is nothing if not profane. These, perhaps, are minor troubles which can be tolerated by a much-enduring public. But the reckless attacks on human life and limb which are recorded every day, and the rowdyism which is a disgrace to the community, call for stern repression by the authorities. We have no doubt it will call in vain.

One condition of success in the approaching campaign will be the readiness of delegates to the State Convention to surrender their personal preferences in order that the nomination of the strongest candidates may be obtained. Pledges in support of principle are well enough; pledges in support of particular men as candidates are a source of bickering and division. Besides, the policy of the party should have much to do with the nominations, and that policy cannot be determined until after a free interchange of opinion among the delegates. Where personal preferences predominate, the exposition of policy is made a secondary consideration; and in New-York this would be a fatal mistake. Again, if the better class of Republicans would exert their proper influence, they must attend the caucuses which will very shortly be held. The caucus cannot be justly extolled as a piece of party machinery, but in its bad side it is the result of the unwillingness of good men to assist in its management. If the State is to be redeemed, its best citizens must perform their full share of political service.

The stream of families which three months ago flowed into the country will soon ebb City-ward. If living in rural localities were less a matter of fashion than it is, the multitudes who go so hurriedly would not come back so quickly. The question for those who are not owners or occupiers of houses now is, what is the prospect for boarders in New-York? Are rates to go up or down? An upward movement ought not to be regarded as possible, and it would not be possible if landlords and landladies regulated their charges by the cost of the commodities they supply. Everything that enters into the cost of living is lower, and hotel rates and boarding-house rates must be lower too. The hotels which have recognized this tendency, and reduced their charges, have been crowded in consequence. New hotels are opening, avowedly to satisfy the demand for cheaper living. There is, too, an evident growth of opinion in favor of "the flat" system in dwellings, as suited to the wants of small families with limited means. It is in this direction that we must look for deliverance from the extravagance which is inseparable from hotel life, and from the discomfort which is the chief characteristic of the old boarding-house plan.

"The way to success does not lie in rehearsing its good deeds," is a very just remark made in Harper's Weekly, apropos of the tendency of prominent Republicans to limit their advocacy of the Republican Party to the recital of its glorious record. In the approaching campaign, the party will not be on trial for past deeds—it will be a claimant for popular support on account of its future policy. The past tells its own story. It is in the future that needs the light. Does the party intend to make a systematic reduction of taxes a part of its policy? Is it prepared to pledge itself to the reform as well as the reduction of taxation? Has it definite ideas in reference to finance? Does it mean to push forward the work of retrenchment in Congress and in the Departments? Will it identify itself with a reconstruction and amendment of the civil service? How does it stand in regard to Chinese immigration and the labor question generally? These may not be pleasant inquiries to everybody, but they are the inquiries which are uppermost in men's minds, and the Republican conventions, if well advised, will answer them explicitly. The New-York Convention should set a good example. The Republicans of the Empire State ought not to shirk their duty by allowing the future national policy of their party to be suggested at the last moment.

The London Times has decided that the Germans must not attack Paris, because to do so would be "to insult the French people." Therefore "the suggestion must be at once discarded." It is a pity the oracle did not speak before. The London Times has thus far settled the events of the war in its own high and mighty fashion. But we doubt whether the Crown Prince will turn back when he hears that the English journal disapproves of his enterprise. It would be very strange if the Times did not contrive to set both Prussia and France against England before it concludes its useful labors.

Dullness in real estate does not imply decline of value,—at least in this City or its neighborhood. There have been some rash speculations in the City and out of it, and the speculators will find their fingers burned. That, however, is the result of unsound judgment, and has nothing to do with the general rise in values which has taken place on the island, and in the more attractive adjacent localities. In these cases, the advance which has occurred within the last four years, large as it may seem, is not in excess of a fair estimate of actual worth. Depression in other affairs may make it difficult always to realize the full benefit of the advance, and may entail disappointment and loss where sales are forced. But, as a rule, there is no safer investment than in real estate at current values.

Mr. THURLOW WEED, in an interesting letter from Montreal, published in the Commercial Advertiser, wonders why so much greater of domestic use should be so much dearer in the United States than in Canada? Other people have been quite as much puzzled on this subject for a long period past. Beef in Montreal costs from twelve to fifteen cents of our currency, per pound; butter from ten to twelve cents. Everything else is in the same proportion. If you want to ride about the city, you can have a cab for two hours and a half for two dollars. "Why," says Mr. WEED, "should there be a difference of one hundred and fifty to two hundred per cent. in the prices of the same articles, by simply crossing the River St. Lawrence?" The purveyors of food and other articles could, no doubt, answer this question to their own satisfaction; but not to the satisfaction of the public. Prices are higher here than in Canada, ready in order that our storekeepers may make a fortune quicker. It cannot be said that "Government taxes" account for the exorbitant charges made for the necessaries of daily life. Co-operative stores would soon lessen the rapacity which now prevails on every side, but the public seem disposed to submit without a struggle to any impositions which may be practiced upon them.

There are policemen in the Central Park after nightfall—should there not also be gas-lights? Lamps are all around and far beyond the Park, and the plans for its improvement will not be complete until its main drives are similarly supplied. The darkness which now exists adds greatly to the risk of accident, and furnishes facilities for outrage which are for many reasons undesirable. So much is being done to improve and beautify the Park, as well as the plots and squares "down-town," that the Commissioners cannot be suspected of indifference to a want of such obvious importance.

AMUSEMENTS.

Announcements for To-night.

Mr. JAMES SCHONBERG's version of PAUL MEURICE's drama of "Fanfan la Tulipe" is to be produced this evening at Niblo's Theatre, under the title of "True as Steel." Mr. LAWRENCE BARRETT is to fill the principal part. There will be a change of performance at the Grand Opera-house, as well as at Niblo's, and "Ursula," a new ballet, is to be danced. This night is also set apart for the opening representation of the San Francisco Minstrels.

Miscellaneous Notes.

The announcements in relation to the second season of the Church Music Association are at hand. The list of subscribers is large, and it includes the most representative persons in the City. The choral department, it seems, is to be materially increased in strength, and the orchestra is to be augmented by the addition of string-instruments principally. As for the works it is intended to interpret, it is probable that HAYDN'S Third Mass, an oratorio by HANDEL, another by MENDELSSOHN, and masses by BEETHOVEN and NEIDERMEYER will be the most important selected for performance. Mr. GEORGE T. STRONG remains President of the Association, and Dr. JAMES PECK is still its accomplished conductor. The Secretary is Rev. W. H. COOKE. Members of the Executive Committee receive, as heretofore, all subscriptions.

THE SEASON AT THE FRENCH THEATRE.

The season at the French Theatre will be commenced on the 12th of the coming month. Mr. H. W. CALYO, the scenic artist of the house, is busily employed in preparing to meet the exigencies of Mme. SERRACH's repertory. That gifted artist is now on her way to the United States, having sailed last week from Antwerp.

MISS NILSSON'S ENGAGEMENT.

There is a strong probability that Mr. MAURICE STRAKOSCH, whose management of Mlle. PATTI's affairs for many years kept his name before the public, will visit the United States in September, to co-operate with Mr. MAX STRAKOSCH in the direction of the representations of Miss NILSSON.

FRENCH WORKS IN AMERICA.

It will afford pleasure to all persons favoring the passage of an international copyright law, with a view to securing to foreign authors a share of the profits of the works made known in this country, to announce that in the case of one author, at least, arrangements have been made by which some return will be assured him for profits derived here from his gain. M. VICTORIEN SARDOU has signed a contract with Mr. MAX MARETZEK, giving to the latter gentleman advance copies of all plays written by him, for a lengthened term of years, to allow of their simultaneous production in France and in America. An additional special agreement between these parties and M. JACQUES OFFENBACH, also concedes to Mr. MARETZEK the privilege of simultaneous production of "King Carrot," the spectacular opera bouffe now being completed by that composer and M. SARDOU, for the Gaité Theatre. We are satisfied that the advantage to be secured, in respect of time, by the purchase of plays from the authors (representative—since a more honest motive can, unhappily, not be looked for—will lead to the adoption of similar beneficial measures, in regard to the productions of other writers and composers abroad.

WASHINGTON.

Accounts for Quartermasters' Stores—Purchase of Bonds and Sale of Gold—A Conflict of Authorities—New Banks.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—A large number of accounts of army officers for Quartermasters' stores, have accumulated during and since the war in the office of the Third Auditor, which could not be settled, owing to irregularities, generally of a technical character. The amounts involved were generally small, but as the law left the accounting officers no option, they have necessarily left these accounts unsettled. The last Congress, however, authorized a settlement of all such cases, where the amount involved was less than $5,000, upon the statement of the officer responsible, when there was no appearance of fraud. Under this provision, these accounts, many of which have been upon the files of the Department since the early part of the war, are being rapidly overhauled and disposed of. It is estimated that between 5,000 and 10,000 accounts will be settled under the new law. A small increase has been made in the clerical force of the Fifth Auditor's Office, and preparations made to audit the accounts of the Assistant Marshals, so that there need be no unnecessary delay in their obtaining their pay. Judge BARROW, Fifth Auditor, left for Wisconsin last night, to be absent a month.

PURCHASE OF BONDS AND SALE OF GOLD.

Assistant Secretary of the Treasury RICHARDSON, has issued an order for the purchase of bonds and the sale of gold for September, as follows: The purchase of one million bonds on Thursday, the 1st, and each alternate Thursday, and two millions on Thursday, Sept. 8, and each alternate Thursday. Seven millions in all. The sale of one million of gold on each Wednesday of the month. Four millions in all.

A CONFLICT OF STATE AND FEDERAL AUTHORITY.

In one or more of the border States several Registers of Election have been arrested by United States Commissioners for refusing to register parties who served in the Confederate Army. These Registers have acted in accordance with the State laws, but not conformably to a recent statute of the United States. Thus there is a conflict between State and Federal authorities. Representations have been made to the Attorney-General of the United States, who, having been asked for his opinion, says he does not consider the question within his province, but that it is one belonging to the Courts, to which effect he has given instructions to the Commissioners, Marshals and others concerned.

THE MEADE CLAIM.

The heirs of the late RICHARD W. MEADE will meet in Philadelphia, on Wednesday next, at the Head-quarters of Gen. GEORGE G. MEADE, to hold a council as to what action shall be taken in the matter of the "Meade claim," whether it shall be prosecuted against Spain, against the United States, or against both Governments.

NEW NATIONAL BANKS.

During the week ending yesterday, certificates were issued authorizing the following national banks to commence business: The National Bank of Maysville, Ky.; capital, $200,000; James Wallingford, President; James A. Johnson, Cashier. The Merchants' and Planters' National Bank of Augusta, Ga.; capital, $150,000; Thos. F. Branch, Vice-President; Joseph S. Bean, Cashier. The following applications have been approved: Charleston, West Va., J. S. Walker and associates; Fort Scott, Kansas, B. F. McDonald & Co.; Stanford, Ky., J. R. Stanley and others; Franklin, Ky., R. D. Salmons, J. L. McGoodwin and others; Somerset, Ky., W. Woodcock and others; Creston, Iowa, Kimball and Farnsworth; Lexington, Ky., J. M. Hooker, Horace G. Craig and others; Cartage, Mo., E. N. Harper and others; Helena, Ill., Red Fox Stanford and others; Menasha, Wis., H. Hewitt, Shield, Kimberly and others; Gallatin, Tenn., J. R. A. Tomkins and others.... The following applications for Gold Banks have been approved: New-York City, A. Corbin and others; Boston, Mass., Foote & French and others.

GENERAL TELEGRAMS.

GENERAL EUROPEAN NEWS.

Carlist Rising in Spain—A French Cruiser Off the Roman Coast.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—An important Carlist rising is reported in the provinces of Navarre and Gerona, and troops are leaving Madrid for the scene.

TOULON, Aug. 28.—The Orenque frigate, flagship of the Mediterranean Squadron, has left for Civita Vecchia, to cruise on the Roman coast, as a precaution against the Garibaldians.

CUBA.

The Panama and Havana Cable—Celebration of its Completion to Santiago.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA, Aug. 28.—There have been great rejoicings over the laying of the cable to Santiago. There was a grand illumination of the harbor last night, a display of fireworks, and a torchlight procession in boats. Sir CHARLES BRIGHT was serenaded by 400 volunteers, who chartered some river steamers, and, illuminating them, sailed around the vessels of the expedition, their bands playing "God Save the Queen." The steamers Dacus, Suffolk and Vestal were also illuminated. Count VALMASEDA and over 500 of the first citizens visited the Dacus and inspected the machinery for laying the cable. The celebration commenced last night at 8 o'clock and continues this morning. The citizens have been invited to a ball on the Vestal. The cable is working finely. The enthusiasm on shore is unbounded. The expedition will probably remain here five days.

LONG BRANCH.

The Ninth Regiment Parade—A Speech to the Men by Col. Fisk.

LONG BRANCH, Aug. 28.—The Ninth Regiment had a dress parade in front of the Continental Hotel this evening, at 6 o'clock, which was witnessed by over 7,000 people, and every movement was applauded. There were religious services in camp, the sermon being preached by Rev. Dr. SPENCER. The regiment formed a square, making a very imposing scene, and was photographed by C. D. FREDERICKS & Co., of New-York. Col. FISK made the following speech to his men:

Officers and Soldiers of the Ninth Regiment: By this time to-morrow evening, there will be nothing left of Camp Gould but the ground upon which our tents now stand. To-morrow we shall be on the march, and therefore I avail myself of the present opportunity to address you. This is our last night in camp, and I cannot dismiss you without expressing the pride and satisfaction I feel at your conduct. You have behaved well as soldiers, and I am proud of you; you have behaved well as citizens, and I thank you. During the ten days you have been encamped I have not received a single complaint from any quarter—from the residents of Long Branch or from the visitors; and considering that we left New-York nearly seven hundred strong, and have had on an average about five hundred men per day here, this is more than I expected. I certainly anticipated a little trouble outside, but I rejoice to say that up to this moment I have not received the first complaint. Gentlemen, this is something to be proud of, and I cannot find words to express my thanks to you, one and all. The few days I have spent here have been more to me than as many months. I have learned to know you better and I have realized the responsibility of my position. Gentlemen, I am proud to command such a regiment, and it shall be my study to make the Ninth the model regiment of the National Guard. Once again I thank you for the attention you have paid to your duties, and in view of the progress made, I am convinced none of us will regret the time spent in Camp Gould.

The Colonel was repeatedly interrupted by the applause of the men and spectators, and at the close of the address received enthusiastic cheers.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.

Dwellings of Thirty-Two Poor Families in Worcester Destroyed—The Sufferers Lose All Their Property.

WORCESTER, MASS., Aug. 28.—A fire last night destroyed a building owned by Judge HENRY CHAPIN, R. C. TAYLOR and DADMAN'S estate, valued at $60,000, which was insured, and occupied by M. A. WORCESTER for a dry hop-yeast factory, who loses $10,000, and is insured for $7,500. Two stables, owned by the same parties, one valued at $6,000, and insured, the other valued at $2,000, uninsured, and occupied by W. J. MCDONELL, who loses in hay, grain, &c., several hundred dollars; two houses belonging to JAMES MURPHY, valued at $2,800 and insured for $2,400; two houses belonging to WM. DODDY, valued at $1,200 and not insured; one house belonging to JOHN MCKEAN, valued at $1,000, insurance not yet learned, and is partially destroyed, and three other houses, one belonging to Judge CHAPIN and R. C. TAYLOR and DADMAN'S estate, one to MICHAEL DONOHOE, and the third to JAMES QUIRK. Thirty-two poor families of tenants were deprived of homes and lost all of their furniture. The total loss is about $95,000, and the whole insurance, so far as has been learned, amounts to $15,000. The insurance was mostly in Boston, New-York and Worcester offices. The fire was confined to the region of Mechanic, Bridge and Hibernia streets, and was the heaviest since June, 1854. There was no lack of water from the city hydrants.

The New-Orleans Child-Stealing Case—The Kidnappers Held in $5,000 Bail.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 28.—The examination of LOUISA MURRAY and ELLEN FOLLEY, who are charged with having kidnapped the DIGBY child at New Orleans, was concluded before Judge HAUGHTON. They were each held to bail in the sum of $5,000, to answer at another Court. As soon as the decision was announced there was an effort at applause, which was promptly suppressed.

An Ex-Revenue Detective Arrested for Blackmailing.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 28.—Capt. EDWARD STACY, late revenue detective in this State, was arrested in Nashville, on a charge of blackmailing liquor-dealers. He was brought before the United States Commissioner, and committed to jail in default of $15,000 bail.

Miscellaneous Telegrams.

GREYTOWN, Aug. 16.—The French bark Breme, of Nantes, from Bordeaux, with a cargo of general merchandise, and bound to Cape Gracios a Dios, put into Greytown, leaking badly. She was condemned, and was to be sold the next day. The crew arrived here in the Scotsman.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Aug. 28.—OLIVER J. DICKEY has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of Lancaster County, Penn.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Aug. 28.—Bishop SIMPSON, who is in this city as the presiding officer of the East General Conference now in session here, preached a very eloquent discourse in the Opera House, this afternoon. Every part of the large hall was filled, not less than 2,500 persons being present. Almost an equal number went away, unable to gain admission.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 28.—The national camp-meeting of Second Adventists closed tonight. About 100 tents were put up, and 3,000 Adventists were present. The meeting was prosperous and successful. About 15,000 people were on the camp-ground today.

SCRANTON, Penn., Aug. 28.—Hon. JAMES ARCHBALD died at his residence in this city, Friday morning, aged seventy-five. Mr. ARCHBALD was a leading pioneer and representative man in the Lackawanna Valley. He was universally esteemed and respected by all classes of its citizens.

Attempted Murder of a Divorced Wife—Suicide of the Would-be Murderer.

The Detroit Tribune, of the 26th inst., says: "Yesterday afternoon, W. O. MARTIN, a tailor, attempted to take the life of his divorced wife, and afterward shot, and it is supposed, fatally wounded himself. The preliminary history of the tragedy seems to be about as follows: Nearly a year since, MARTIN's wife procured a legal separation from him, and he left the city soon after and returned very suddenly. Yesterday he visited the woman at her home, No. 158 Antoine-street, and begged of her to live with him again. He professed the most ardent love, and offered to make any sacrifice, provided she would again become his wife. She persistently refused, however, and finally MARTIN drew a revolver and shot at her. Fortunately, the bullet missed, and, with the exception of a slight scorching in the face from the powder, she received no injury whatever. MARTIN next drew a knife and rushed upon the woman, but the shot called in outsiders and the attempted murder was prevented. MARTIN now started to run away, but was hotly pursued by a number of men. He was chased through several streets and alleys, and finally into the alley between Lafayette and Fort streets, east of Hastings. Here he was surrounded, and finding that he could not well avoid an arrest, he deliberately placed his revolver upon his head and fired. The bullet entered in the region of the temple and buried itself somewhere in the skull. He was as soon as possible removed to St. Mary's Hospital, where he received the best surgical treatment. He was alive at a late hour last night, but there are no hopes of saving his life."

CENTRAL AMERICA.

ARRIVAL OF THE OCEAN QUEEN.

The steam-ship Ocean Queen, from Aspinwall Aug. 19, reached this port yesterday. By the courtesy of Purser W. A. SMITH, our correspondence and files were promptly delivered us. The news they contain is given below.

United States of Colombia—Revolutionary Disturbances at Bogota and in Cundinamarca—The State of Panama—Obituary—Chinese Labor—Affairs in Guatemala, Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ASPINWALL, Isthmus of Panama, Friday, Aug. 19, 1870.

By the arrival of the steam-ship Caribbean from Santa Martha I have received dates from Bogota, the capital of this country, to the 20th of July. Peace no longer reigns in Bogota or in the State of Cundinamarca. A revolution has broken out in the said State. On the 16th of July Bogota was aroused by the cry of revolution. The party consisted of six or seven hundred "hombres," the leaders being students from the University of Bogota. The resignation of BRICEÑO, Governor of the State of Cundinamarca, was demanded, and he was forced to yield to the desires of the mob, who appointed a Provisional Governor. The whole affair was effected without loss of life on either side. The General Government merely sent a guard to protect Colombian property, and prevent injury to Ex-Governor BRICEÑO. There will undoubtedly be a counter-revolution gotten up by BRICEÑO and his friends, which may involve the State of Cundinamarca in war. The Government of Colombia (of which Bogota is the capital as well as the capital of said State) will protect all foreigners and their interests in the event of a State war, but the General Government cannot interfere in State quarrels. No doubt Gen. BELALCAZAR, the President of Colombia, will do all in his power to suppress the rebellion which now threatens to engulf the State.

STATE OF PANAMA.

The State of Panama, too, may have its revolution ere long. The State Legislature will meet in Panama, the Capital, on the 1st of September, when President CORREOSO's acts will be investigated. This action toward foreigners in the collection of a greatly increased commercial tax, after the destruction of a portion of the city by fire, and the treatment of JULIEN and CLEMENT, two French subjects, who are still kept in jail, on the suspicion that they set fire to the Aspinwall Hotel, of which they were the proprietors, have greatly exasperated the foreigners on the Isthmus, and the Legislature of the State may make these acts of CORREOSO's a pretext for displacing him and appointing a successor, which will, of course, be cause for a revolution. In the present state of decline of this Isthmus, it is to be hoped that the Legislature will take no steps to create a revolution, for peace is very desirable.

OBITUARY.

Señor DON ANTONIO GUERRA, who has filled the position of Postmaster in Aspinwall (Colon) with credit for a long period, died suddenly on the 6th inst. Señor ARGUEMENA has been of great service to his country, and has held many positions of honor. He was chosen Colombian Commissioner, and accompanied the Darien Survey Expedition. On his return he furnished very interesting reports and drawings of that region, which had never before been explored. Mr. ARGUEMENA is brother-in-law to Ex-Consul RICE, of this place, now residing in Maine, and the sad news will be a severe blow to him and his wife, the amiable sister of the deceased.

CHINESE LABOR.

Dr. SEEMAN, the managing director of the Bayano estate, a large sugar plantation in this State, (Panama,) has returned. The employing of Chinese as laborers, will insure the Company a rich reward. I understand that Dr. SEEMAN contemplates such a movement. The Bayano estate is situated on the Rio Bayano, which will form the route of the ship-canal on the Pacific side, should the San Blas route be selected.

THE FRENCH FETE DAY.

The 15th inst., NAPOLEON'S day, was celebrated in Panama by the French residents with great enthusiasm. The French Consul gave an entertainment at the Grand Hotel. Among the guests were most of the Consuls of other nations on the Isthmus. Flags were flung to the breeze, and illuminations and fire-works the order of the night.

Central America.

The Panama Railroad Company's steamship Costa Rica arrived off Panama on the morning of the 18th. She brings late dates from Central America. The news is of considerable importance, and I give it in full as published by the Panama Star and Herald on the 18th.

GUATEMALA.

From a correspondent in Guatemala we learn that the Republic in general was quiet, although there are some wanting certain malcontents, relics of the party of SERAPIO CRUZ, who were endeavoring to excite disorder among the people on the border and organize opposition to the Government. The principal leader in this movement is a certain DON MIGUEL GRANADOS, against whom an order was issued in February last. To avoid being imprisoned he asked to be sent out of the Republic, which was conceded under the condition that he promised not to return without leave from the Government, and further that he should not reside in any of the Central American States. It seems that GRANADOS crossed the Isthmus, went to Mexico and found a way again to Guatemala some time during last month. It is reported that he at once began to hunt up recruits and put himself in relation with the sanguinary BARRIOS and other chiefs who escaped after the battle of Palencia. With these aids and some arms which, it is said, he expected by way of Tehuantepec, and with the tolerance and connivance of the authorities of Chiapas, GARCIA GRANADOS, it would seem, hopes to succeed in his criminal and rebellious projects. In the meantime the commanding Generals of the frontier departments, Huehuetenango and San Marcos, are on the outlook and prepared for any attempt at invasion. On the same subject a correspondent in Salvador says that many rumors are rife about revolutions in Guatemala, but nothing very certain is known as to the whereabouts of ECHAPARRIA, who, it is said, has some 3,000 men with him, principally Indians, from the State of Guatemala. Of his officers some twenty were formerly with MAXIMILIAN's army, but there is no certainty where he will make his appearance. The Government of Guatemala are prepared to receive them.

NICARAGUA.

There was an earthquake on the 26th ult. at 11¼ P. M., produced, it is thought, by the volcano of Momotombo, from which subterranean noises proceed and are heard almost every night. People from Leon, says the Gaceta de Nicaragua, of the 30th July, tells us they have noticed flames and smoke from the crater.

COSTA RICA.

Periodicals from Costa Rica offer nothing particular, but from private sources we learn that the Provisional President, Señor BRUNO CARRANZA, has had to resign, while the National Convention has put in THOMAS GUARDIA, who, by no means, commands the amount of esteem that CARRANZA did. We are sorry to see political agitation again the order of the day. We fear Señor GUARDIA is placed in power only temporarily, soon to be superseded by a leading politician of more ability.

The Congress of the 7th instant, speaking of the situation of the country, has the following introductory remarks: "The election of Deputies having terminated, the meeting of the National Convention was arranged for the 15th of August. The definition of the state of the country has given rise to much discussion, especially with respect to the relations between Costa Rica and Guatemala. The Provisional Government of the former had declared that the treaties between the two nations had ceased to exist, owing to the unfriendly conduct of Guatemala. Except this aspect of affairs, there is nothing else of general importance to notice."

The Comercio, of Costa Rica, of the 3d inst., in noticing that the 15th inst. is the day assigned for the convocation of the Convention, says: "The object of this Constituent Assembly, to be composed of thirty-two members, is: First—To give the Republic also Constitution more suitable to the actual state of the country, and which will better guarantee republican institutions, and be more in harmony with the desires of the people. Second—To fix a term for the Ex-President and his Secretaries to give an account of their responsibilities."

POLITICAL.

GENERAL NOTES.

The Portland Advertiser manifests its political enterprise by nominating Chief-Justice CHASE for President in 1872.

The San Francisco Bulletin publishes a rumor to the effect that the friends of Ex-Senator JOHN CONNESS are making an effort in the East to secure his appointment as Collector of the Port of San Francisco—the position now held by T. G. PHELPS.

The St. Louis Times (Democratic) unkindly remarks: "It is to be hoped that the Oregon Democracy will have sense enough not to put forward the venerable JOE LANE for the United States Senatorship. That's a lane which ought to have been turned down long ago."

The Chicago Times says that Hon. J. D. CATON is not a candidate for Congress in the Ottawa, Ill., District, or any other district, either for the Democratic or Radical Party. He has retired from political life, but his sympathies are still warmly with the Democratic cause.

In Tennessee, two ex-Confederate officers—Gen. JOHN C. BROWN and Gen. QUARLES—are being urged for the Democratic nomination for Governor. It is reported that ANDY JOHNSON may also be a candidate. HORACE MAYNARD, Hon. N. W. TAYLOR, BAILLIE PETTUS and EDWARD COOPER, are named for Congress.

We have encouraging reports from Alabama. Hon. JOSHUA MOSES, present Attorney-General of the State, will probably receive the Republican nomination for Governor, and JAMES T. RAPIER, a negro, for Secretary of State. It is not thought that the political complexion of the delegation of the State to Congress will be materially changed.

The canvass in Maine is becoming quite lively, chiefly on the question of United States Senator, in the place of LOT M. MORRILL. Public meetings are being held in the several counties, and the Press have been discussing the matter for weeks. Ex-Gov. CHAMBERLAIN and Senator MORRILL are the rival candidates, with the prospect of success strongly in favor of the former, he being favored by the Democrats.

Hon. HAMILTON WARD, Republican member of Congress from the Twenty-seventh District, in this State, has withdrawn his name as a candidate for renomination. He has served in that capacity two terms, and now declines in order to secure the harmony of the party, which has been seriously disturbed of late. Mr. H. BOARDMAN SMITH, of Chemung, is named as a candidate for the place, and other candidates will doubtless be brought forward, now that Mr. WARD is out of the way.

The Burlington Press says there is a good deal of excited feeling in the First Congressional District of Vermont, since the Middlebury Convention, and it freely asserted that Mr. WILLARD's opponents will run an independent candidate. The difficulty is, to find a candidate whom they can run, under the circumstances, with the faintest hope of success. Before the Convention, they professed to be willing to unite on HENRY CLARK, of Rutland; but, when the Convention met, if we are correctly informed, Mr. CLARK was hardly so much as mentioned.

Vermont leads off in the Fall elections on the 6th of September, with the usual State and Congressional tickets. The canvass will not be very spirited, and the Republican tickets will be elected almost unanimously. Last year the State gave a little over 20,000 Republican majority, and in 1868 it gave GRANT a majority of over 22,000. This year it will probably give about 20,000. There is no United States Senatorial canvass involved this year, no vacancy occurring until 1873, when Senator JOHN S. MORRILL's term expires.

There is trouble among the Republicans in the Second Congressional District of Illinois, now represented by JOHN F. FARNSWORTH. The chief objection to him is made on the rotation principle, he having held the position five terms. He is very strong in the District, and will probably be renominated, in which case his opponents threaten to put up an independent candidate. What his chances of success would be may be judged from the fact that, in 1868, Mr. FARNSWORTH was elected by a majority of over 14,000 in a poll of 27,000.

The nomination of Hon. SAMUEL SHELLABARGER to Congress by the Republicans of the Seventh Ohio District betokens a lively canvass, which, we have no doubt, will result in his election. Mr. SHELLABARGER was first elected to Congress in 1860; in 1862 he was defeated by Hon. S. S. COX, and in 1864 and 1866 he was re-elected. In 1868 he declined a renomination, and Judge WILSON was elected in his stead by 105 majority. The district has a large colored vote, and is counted good for a Republican majority of over 1,000. HUGH J. JEWETT, a prominent railroad man, is the Democratic nominee.

The New-Brunswick Freeholder says that the Republican Party in New-Jersey is determined to make an energetic canvass this Fall, in view of the important results depending upon the election. Members of Congress are to be chosen and a Legislature which will not only elect the United States Senator to succeed Mr. CATTELL, but also redistrict the State for the next decade under the new Census law, and thus virtually decide its politics until 1880. Congressional Conventions have been called in most of the districts, the Second, Third, and Fourth Republican, and Fifth Democratic, meet on Sept. 1, the First Republican on the 8th, and the Fourth Democratic on the 15th.

The contest in the Twenty-third New-York District (Onondaga and Cortland) waxes warm. It seems that when Mr. DENNIS MCCARTHY—the present incumbent—was nominated for his second term, a pledge was made to the people of Cortland County that he would not again be a candidate, and that his successor should be conceded to them. He is now said to be actively canvassing for the nomination, and the people of Cortland are equally active in their opposition. Mr. MCCARTHY is the representative of the Syracuse salt monopoly, and its influence is being strongly exerted to secure his renomination.

The Governors of Kentucky and Florida have both issued proclamations calling upon all good citizens to aid in suppressing lawlessness. Gov. STEVENSON says in his proclamation:

"And, for these as all other violations of law, which have or may occur in the localities named or elsewhere, it is enjoined upon the civil authorities to be vigilant and vigorous in bringing the offenders to punishment. The security to life and property rests chiefly in the certainty with which punishment, under the forms of law, overtakes crime, and there is no sufficient force in the means prescribed by the statutes which does not entail ultimate evils more grievous than the crime itself. Mob violence, in whatever form, is no remedy for either public or private wrong. It is in fact, a crime against the State, more reckless and demoralizing attack on social order. The vindication of the law is better than the vengeance of the lawless, who, in assuming to punish offenders, strike a heavier blow at the peace of society than those upon whom their vengeance falls."

The Baltimore American says: "It is reported that the registers of voters in Baltimore City will memorialize Gov. BOWIE to convene the General Assembly in extra session for the purpose of amending the Registry law, so as to enable all citizens to exercise their right of franchise at the coming municipal election in October. The city delegation in the Legislature, it is said, inclose the propositions, and will during the coming week have a meeting at the office of Hon. FERDINAND C. LATROBE, Speaker of the House of Delegates, to consider the subject." The American insists that no legal election for members of the Civil Council could be held in October under the Registration law passed by the Legislature at its recent session.

The St. Louis Republican, in referring to the preliminary canvass for the Republican nomination for Governor of Missouri, says that unexpected strength has been developed by STARKER, he threatens now to go into the Convention prepared to stubbornly contest the honors with BROWN and MCCLURG. He is not as strong as either; but this very fact may prove to be his most effective element of strength, at least, for he may become the inheritor of the resources of the defeated one of the two; and aided by this reinforcement, may be able to dress the victor. It is noticeable that BROWN has grown weak in the proportion that STARKER has grown strong, which suggests the probability that he is about to become the inheritor of BROWN's sword, on condition that he slay MCCLURG with it. The St. Charles delegation are for STARKER, and the St. Charles Cosmos, like a good many other papers that seemed to be for BROWN while they actually were for STARKER, predicts that MCCLURG will not be nominated on the first ballot, and that STARKER will be nominated on a subsequent one.

The Richmond (Va.) State Journal, in advising with the colored people of the State, says:

"Surely no sensible colored man believes that there is a possibility of the race to which he belongs being able to rule Virginia, outside of the white race or in opposition to it; and yet a large portion are at present acting as if they were bent upon carrying out this impracticable idea. There are in the State, in round numbers, about 110,000 colored voters. Against these there are 150,000 or more white voters—40,000 more white than black. If we should divide these on the distinctive, well-marked lines of color, the white men would have a majority of 10,000 at each general election, and would always be able to elect two-thirds of the General Assembly, two-thirds of the representatives in Congress, both the United States Senators, all the State officers, and the electors for President and Vice-President. And as the Legislature elects the Judges, and the Judges select the jurors, the white people would always control the judiciary. The colored people would receive nothing save a few unimportant offices in about one-third of the counties, and for which they would not be able perhaps to furnish the unexceptable bonds required."

The Chicago Republican takes it for granted that the Republicans of Illinois will elect their State ticket this Fall. "With popular and deserving candidates," says the Republican,

"Such as the coming State Convention will select, there ought not to be, and we presume there will not be, any great difficulty in their triumphant election. So, too, of the Congressmen to be chosen. According to present appearances, the next delegation in Congress will be the present one, with the chance of a Republican gain in the Thirteenth District. The real point of danger to be watched with a vigilant care, is the State Legislature. This body is to choose a United States Senator; and we may rest assured that the Democrats will spare no pains, labor nor expense to make a Senator in our lines for the purpose of securing this prize. Up to this time, the principal activity and work in the Republican ranks have been brought about by the contests among individuals to secure nominations to the various offices that are to be filled, occasioning, in several instances, a great waste of efforts, not to mention the bitter rivalry, the bad feeling, the apathy, and the general tendency to division which always follow."

The following are the nominations for Congressmen made by both parties in Indiana, and the majority in each district for Congressmen in 1868:

First District—H. Clay Gooding, Republican; W. E. Niblack, Democrat; Democratic majority, 1,486. Second District—George W. Carr, Republican; M. C. Kerr, Democrat; Democratic majority, 4,439. Third District—H. E. Fritchard, Republican; W. S. Holman, Democrat; Democratic majority, 765. Fourth District—J. M. Wilson, Republican; D. S. Gooding, Democrat; Republican majority, 116. Fifth District—John Coburn, Republican; Thomas Cottrell, Democrat; Republican majority, 1,500. Sixth District—Moses F. Dunn, Republican; D. W. Voorhees, Democrat; Democratic majority, 139. Seventh District—Lewis Wallace, Republican; M. D. Mason, Democrat; Republican majority, 437. Eighth District—James N. Tyner, Republican; W. C. Moreau, Democrat; Republican majority, 4,301. Ninth District—J. P. C. Shanks, Republican; John Coleridge, Democrat; Republican majority, 941. Tenth District—William Williams, Republican; M. S. Hascall, Democrat; Republican majority, 2,254. Eleventh District—Jasper Packard, Republican; S. J. Anthony, Democrat; Republican majority, 1,221.

Miscellaneous Political News.

Gov. GRARY has appointed another colored Notary Public in Philadelphia.

JAMES MONROE has received the Republican nomination for Congress in the Fourteenth District of Ohio.

Dr. F. B. IVES has been nominated for Congress by a Union Temperance Convention, in the Fifth District of Illinois.

O. D. CONGER has been nominated by the Republicans, in the Fifth Michigan Congressional District.

Hon. W. S. GROESBECK declines to be the Democratic candidate for Congress in the Second Ohio District.

The Democratic ticket in San Francisco is in danger from an adverse combination of Germans and Irish.

Hon. J. A. AMBLER has been renominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Seventeenth Ohio District. His majority two years ago was 3,906.

Hon. JOSEPH B. DONLEY, of the Twenty-fourth Pennsylvania District, has secured the conferees of Lawrence, Greene and Washington Counties. His renomination seems certain.

The Democratic Convention of the Sixteenth Ohio Congressional District has nominated Hon. ROBERT E. CHAMBERS, of Belmont County, for Congress.

Gov. PALMER, of Illinois, is making out a list of forty-five delegates from the State to attend the National Capital Removing Convention, which meets at Cincinnati on the 26th of October.

Hon. DANIEL CLARKE, of Prince George County, Md., is named for the Democratic-Conservative nomination for Congress in the Fifth District.

Returns from the Monmouth County Republican primary meetings show that the whole county will present almost a solid delegation in favor of the nomination of Hon. WILLIAM A. HOWELL as the Republican candidate for Congress in the Second District.

Forty counties in Missouri have elected delegates to the Republican State Convention, and of these forty, twenty-five, including the St. Louis Tribune, not over five are opposed to the nomination of MCCLURG for Governor. Seventeen are positively instructed for him, and not a single county is instructed for any other candidate.

Judge CHARLES C. SHEALTZER, formerly of Middletown, Frederick County, Md., has been nominated by the Democratic-Conservative Party of the Sixth District of Iowa as their candidate for Congress. At the last election for President the district gave a Republican majority of over 2,500.

GEORGE H. MYERS is spoken of for the Republican nomination in the Fifth Congressional District of Michigan. H. S. MAGOUN, the candidate for the Republican nomination in the Third District has withdrawn from the field. The contest now lies between Messrs. BARBER and HAZELTON. In the Second District Hon. CHARLES G. WILLIAMS is the favorite for the Republican nomination.

A correspondent of the Virginia State Journal says that the anxiety of the Democracy to force a union of all political elements in opposition to Radicalism, must be exceedingly amusing to those old line Whigs, who remember the tender consideration with which they were treated by that amiable, liberal and just organization in ante-bellum days.

Col. ROBERT H. C. COWAN, who was nominated for United States Senator from North Carolina by the Wilmington Journal, writes that he is not, declining to have his name used in such a connection. He says: "In my judgment the General Assembly ought not to elect any one to the Senate who is laboring under political disabilities, unless it can be rendered absolutely certain that those disabilities will be removed by Congress."

The Scranton (Penn.) Republican, says:—"The Democratic conferees of the Fifteenth Congressional District, which includes York, Cumberland and Perry Counties, met at Bridgeport on Thursday. The Cumberland men named as a candidate JOHN B. BRATTON, editor of the Carlisle Volunteer, and then withdrew from the Convention. The remaining six conferees then renominated RICHARD COLEMAN, Esq., formerly a speech from that gentleman and went home, leaving the Cumberland County gentlemen to vote for Mr. HALDEMAN or Mr. BRATTON as they choose when the election comes. Mr. HALDEMAN is a son-in-law of Senator CAMERON, and this fact does not add to his popularity among his Democratic constituents."

A special dispatch from Nebraska says that political agitation, particularly in connection with the candidacies for the United States Senate, is is arousing daily. A coalition of all aspirants to the United States Senatorship against the present incumbent, Gen. TIPTON, whose time expires next Winter, has been formed, and several secret meetings of the combined opposition have been held this week. They agree upon first beating TIPTON in primaries, by the selection of pledged aspirants on the Republican legislative ticket, and afterward taking the chances of who shall succeed to TIPTON's position. The leading aspirants are ex-Gov. ALVIN SAUNDERS, P. H. HAYDOCKER, former Delegate in Congress, and JOHN J. ROSE, a prominent and wealthy lawyer, heading several politicians of less note. The general opinion prevails that the Democrats will make no nomination for Congress or Governor, but will support the nominees of the working men's ticket, reserving their party strength for a fight on the legislative ticket.

We hear from Tennessee that the quarrel between the secession Old Line Whig, and secession Democratic factions is literally waged, the former presenting Gen. JOHN C. BROWN, and the latter Gen. QUARLES, both Confederate officers, for nomination as Governor. In event of Gen. BROWN's nomination the secession Democracy propose to run ANDY JOHNSON independently. Should this contingency happen, Hon. JOHN TURNER, who will be the Republican standard-bearer, will doubtless be elected by a plurality vote. The re-election of Hon. HORACE MAYNARD is considered a certainty; the First District is doubtful. Hon. N. W. TAYLOR, late Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and an ex-Member, is spoken of as a candidate for Congress. He will be bitterly opposed by ANDREW JOHNSON. In all the other districts no Republican can be elected, unless in the Third, Fifth and Eighth Districts. The Democrats present more than one candidate; BAILIE PETTUS in the Fifth, and EDWARD COOPER in the Fourth District have considerable strength, but the fact of their having been originally Union men militates heavily against them in the ranks of the Democracy.

The indications are that the Republicans will carry Alabama, if they can only be successful in effecting a union. Gov. SMITH is a candidate for renomination, but, having fallen out with the Northern element, is bitterly opposed by it, and charged with a failure to prosecute Unionists from Ku-Klux outrages. Hon. JOSHUA MOSES, now Attorney-General of the State, is spoken of as the successful candidate for Governor, and Auditor REYNOLDS has also considerable strength. In the First or Mobile District, Col. H. R. MYERS will probably receive the nomination for Congress, and in the Second District Mr. BULKLEY will doubtless be renominated. In the Third District there is a quarrel between the friends of Judge HERLIE, the present member, and those of Mr. NORRIS, who was a member of the Fortieth Congress, which, unless settled, will result in the election of a Democrat. In the Fourth District, Mr. HAYS will be renominated and elected. The contest for a successor to Senator WARNER is between the Senator and the native Republicans.

NEW-JERSEY.

Opening of the Political Campaign—The Candidates and Their Claims.

From the Newark Advertiser, Aug. 26.

Political affairs in this State are assuming more activity. In Essex County but little has been done beyond the merest preliminaries. The colored citizens have organized in the Thirteenth and Second Wards, and have called a meeting in the Fourth Ward. The Thirteenth Ward Republicans have had one meeting, and will meet again this evening. The campaign, will, however, be more fairly in progress next week, when the Fourth District Republicans and Fifth Districts Democratic Congressional Conventions will be held. The Republican primary meetings in the townships of the county are called for on Monday evening to elect thirty-seven delegates to the Fourth District Convention which meets at Paterson on Thursday. The Democracy of this city will hold their primary meetings on Tuesday evening to elect eighty-five delegates to the Fifth District Convention, which meets at Hoboken on the same day. The Fifth District Republican Convention is the only one that has not yet been called.

There is a lively contest among the Democracy in this district between the friends of Mr. CLEVELAND, of Jersey City, the present member, and Mr. REYNOLDS, of Newark. In previous conventions Newark has always held the numerical strength, but owing to the enormous vote of Governor JOHN P. STEVENS, for Governor, in 1868 this county now has the lead and will have 113 delegates to 85 from Newark. Some of the Newarkers insist that Hudson has had the member or nominee for six years—Gen. WRIGHT, in 1864, ROBERT GILCHRIST, Jr., in 1866, and Mr. CLEVELAND, in 1868, the last member from Essex being Mr. MCCARTHY, elected in 1862. Mr. CLEVELAND's friends, however, claim that courtesy entitles him to a renomination, but this is rebutted by the fact that Gen. WRIGHT was not renominated in 1866. Mr. CLEVELAND's course has been very unsatisfactory—his attempts to ride two horses on the temperance question, and his opposition to the bill with reference to foreign shipping rendering him particularly obnoxious to the Germans, who compose a large portion of the party in Hudson County. These feelings are openly manifesting themselves. In the Sixth Ward of Jersey City a meeting has been called to elect delegates, the object of which meeting is said to be "to allow the people to make the nominations, and not the politicians." This is an anti-Cleveland movement. Both gentlemen, it appears, are in the "picnic" business, and the Hudson County Gazette, a Democratic journal, says that Mr. REYNOLDS, of Newark, gives more attention at the Sarsfield picnic to the errand of the interrogation of the Hon. GROVER CLEVELAND, his competitor for the Congressional nomination. The Jersey City Journal says it can scarcely believe this, unless the fact that "O. C." wouldn't stand treat operated against him in that thirsty multitude, and asks if the remark of the Gazette is its first gentle hint of the opposition to Mr. CLEVELAND's renomination, and will it be followed up by kicks pretty soon?

The Jersey City Standard says that the departure from party usage heretofore has entailed loss and defeat, and that the nomination of Mr. REYNOLDS over Mr. CLEVELAND would be an innovation upon party usage, and injurious to the general interests of the party, in that it would foster the abuse in question and promote its growth, serving as a high and unquestionable authority for continued innovation in the future. The Standard says:

"We desire to impress this view of the case upon the Democracy of the district, particularly in Newark, the people of which portion of the district we find, to our faith, are in favor of Mr. REYNOLDS' nomination this Fall, if two years hence the same disregard is paid to his claims that is now evinced for Mr. CLEVELAND's. As the case now stands, Hudson County has a vested right in the movement—a position she will doubtless maintain for years to come, and hence it will only be necessary, in the future, for the delegates to unite upon some candidate, to insure his nomination, regardless of the claims of Newark, in the face of whose delegates it would be thrown that she herself had originally established the precedent of disregarding party custom. . . . We believe that Mr. REYNOLDS will find his future advantage in waiving at the present whatever he may consider his claims to the nomination."

In the Fourth District, JOHN HILL will undoubtedly be the Republican nominee. The Democracy have several candidates in the field; one of the latest is Mr. A. A. HARRISON, of the Hudson County Bar, who resides in Bergen County. Mr. ALLSTEDE, of Bergen, is also named.

At the election of delegates from the different townships of Monmouth to the Congressional Convention as far as heard from, they were all instructed to go for Dr. NEWELL.

Congressman CHARLES HAGER, of the Second District, is mentioned for renomination, says: "I desire it to be known that I am not a candidate, and will not be a candidate before the Convention, nor could I accept a nomination if tendered."

The Ocean County Republican Convention is called for Oct. 2.

Gen. FRELINGHUYSEN is named for United States Senator, and JOHN MCGREGOR for Governor of the State.

THE SOUTH.

Reconstruction—Political and Material—Progress of the Negro.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The efforts made by the best minds of the country to reach a finality of the reconstruction question seem to have fallen short of the design, politically and materially, and I believe that an attempt to review the subject from a new standpoint may be of some benefit to the Republic and to the colored people. At the organization of the Republic, in 1787, the colored man lost the position in which he stood by virtue of the principles in the Declaration of Independence, and from that date down to the rebellion, his lot before the public was in the corn and cotton fields, or where other menial labor was required of him. But in the great struggle, as a soldier he was recognized, and its seen in the work of reconstruction, not only as a citizen, but among the statesmen, with all the rights in common with his peers. The want of education and social position may for the time stand as a barrier against him, yet, to save the race, he must go forward in the industrial and political field, and subdue every obstacle that may be in the way of their elevation. Nothing could be better as a test of their abilities. If they should prove to be unequal to the task, and fail to sustain the principles which Freedom has established in the entire country, then they may accept the result, and abandon all that would guide them in the pathway of the future. If their success should aid in the solution of the question of material reconstruction between the two races in the Southern States, it will be the most effective proposition that could emanate from the pen of any colored man.

The leading features in the proposed plan for material reconstruction as a national necessity, will be seen in the following points:

1. To secure the right of tenure to homesteads for the freedmen on every plantation where the owners will sell allotments of not less than five acres to every family who will pay for the fee with their labor, in accordance with the conditions of the purchase as hereinafter stated.

2. As an inducement to the owners of plantations to sell lands to their former people, an application will be made to Congress for an appropriation, to be used as loans for three or five years, without interest, the same to be under the control of the Legislature of every State, where laws are necessary for carrying out the details for the disbursements and the collection shall be enacted.

3. The loans to the planters are intended, when re-collected and paid into the Treasury of the State, to constitute a consolidated fund for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the Confederate soldiery, and others of that class, who no longer possess for relief. The management of the fund can be placed under Commissioners to be appointed by the President of the United States for that purpose. In order to guard against fraudulent sale and protect the possessory rights of the freedmen, searches will be made to the satisfaction of the Board of Agriculture, by whom all loans and collections will be made in behalf of the State. It will be the duty of the people in each of the States of the rebellion to provide a suitable pension roll to meet the just claims that may be made upon the Legislatures for relief. The object is to develop and the industrial resources and re-establish the prosperity of the respective States through the magnanimity of the people of the United States.

An elaborate review of political reconstruction will be found in the address to the members of the Forty-first Congress, published in the Monday Chronicle of the 15th of February, and referred to again in the journal of the 17th of May, 1869. But the address to the President of the United States, of the 2d of April, and referred to the Committee of the House on Freedmen's Affairs, will fully justify the efforts that

THE DRINK OF THE PERIOD.

How Soda-Water is Consumed in the Summer-Time.

Some Account of its Manufacture and Consumption in New-York—History of its Accession to Popularity—Interesting Facts and Figures.

There is one class of people in this City to whom the excessive heat of the present Summer has given uniform satisfaction and delight. While everybody else around them was puffing, and blowing, and sweating, and grumbling, and cursing their stars, (especially the dog star,) they alone sat calmly by, basking in the noonside sun and enjoying a continual round of unalloyed pleasure. It is hardly necessary to say that those lucky individuals were the proprietors of soda fountains. To them the Summer of 1870 has been a blessed and a prosperous season, and if they had their way it would prolong its stay with us till after Thanksgiving. Necessity, it is said, is the mother of invention, and the extraordinary heat of the present season has taxed the inventive powers of soda-water manufacturers to their utmost. But they have proved equal to the emergency, and have supplied the public with many new varieties of hot delectable fluid that were never heard of before. Soda-water, as is generally known, is emphatically an American institution. It was not until the Paris Exposition that Europe was made acquainted with the article in the shape in which it is dispensed in this country. The Parisians took to it at once, and the rest of Europe, following the example of Paris, the great leader of fashion, gradually adopted the Yankee notion, until now soda-water, a la Americaine, frizzles from warbled fountains in all the leading capitals of the Old World. Dow, the Boston Soda King, who introduced the article at the Paris Exposition, has ever since been engaged in putting up fountains in London, Paris, and other European cities, to the great delight of the thirsty people and the profitable expansion of his own purse.

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE ARTICLE.

The great improvements that have been made during the past few years in the article that now passes under the general name of soda-water have added immensely to its sale and to its popularity as a Summer drink. It is scarcely twenty years since the sale of soda-water was confined mainly to bottled soda, or mineral water, as it was sometimes called, which was put up in half-pint bottles, and confined to two brands—sarsaparilla and lemon. Pretty soon leading druggists began to supply themselves with urn-shaped fountains, from which they dispensed soda to their customers, with four or five different kinds of syrup, including sarsaparilla, lemon, strawberry, raspberry, and pineapple. From that time soda fountains have rapidly increased in numbers year by year, and also in costliness and in the variety of drinks dispensed therefrom, until, at the present time, it is not uncommon to find in the stores of our leading thoroughfares marble fountains erected at an expense of $10,000 or $15,000, from which are supplied thirty or more different kinds of soda beverages, comprising every variety of fruit syrups, wines, essences, coffee, and mineral and medicinal waters known to the confectioners and pharmaceutists. Within the last three or four years cream has been added to give a richness to the syrups, and has proved the most popular improvement of all. In order to retain their customers after the warm weather is over, the larger establishments now furnish hot soda for the Winter months, with coffee, chocolate and other syrups adapted to the season.

HOW SODA-WATER IS MANUFACTURED.

Probably few consumers of soda-water are aware of the manner in which the article is made, and it may be interesting, therefore, to have some account of the process. In all the variety of syrups and essences used to flavor the drink, or make it rich and palatable, the soda-water which forms the bulk of the liquid is the same, and is drawn from a single reservoir. It is manufactured in this wise: An iron or copper tank of great strength, and covered so as to be perfectly air-tight, is filled about half full of marble-dust mixed with water. Sulphuric acid is dropped into the tank through an air-tight opening, and on coming in contact with the marble-dust, generates carbonic acid gas. This gas is permitted to accumulate in the tank until the pressure from it is sometimes equal to 200 pounds to the square inch. It is then allowed to pass out through another opening in the tank, and is carried in pipes through several vessels called "washers" filled with water, in passing through which the gas is relieved of all impurities. After being thoroughly cleansed by the "washers," through which it is forced by the pressure of the gas generated in the tank, it finally passes into the fountains from which it is drawn for use. These fountains are torpedo-shaped, like the tank, and are, or ought to be, very strongly made, to prevent explosion, as the pressure upon them is precisely the same as on the tank whence the gas is generated. The fountains are filled with water, (which, becoming thoroughly permeated with the carbonic acid gas, forms what is known as soda-water. The best fountains are now lined with porcelain or glass, and the pipes through which the soda-water passes before it is drawn for use are lined with block tin, so that no deleterious substance becomes mixed with the water, as used to be the case when copper-lined fountains and pipes were in use. The pipe leading from the fountain to the faucet from which the soda-water is drawn is encased in ice, and is sometimes of great length—the longer it is, in fact, the cooler being the water. At HUDNUT'S, BOLEN & BYRNE'S, and some other places, the pipe is several thousand feet in length. The syrups with which the soda-water is flavored are manufactured from the juice of various kinds of fruits, from essences, from wines, champagnes, &c., and there is no end to their variety.

CONSUMPTION OF SODA-WATER.

The consumption of soda-water in this City and Brooklyn is very large, and during the present Summer has been larger than ever before. There are estimated to be about 250 soda fountains in drug-stores in New-York, and about 150 in Brooklyn. Besides these there are large numbers in confectionery stores, and a great many "stands" in the street. The number of glasses drawn from each fountain varies greatly, some of the larger establishments, like BOLEN & BYRNE'S, No. 169 Broadway, and HUDNUT'S, in the Herald building, drawing as many as 5,000 glasses per day during the warm weather. Comparatively few of the soda venders manufacture their own soda-water or syrups, but have it supplied to them by the large manufacturers in fountains like those above described, which vary in size from six to twenty gallons. The largest manufacturers of soda-water in this City are BOLEN & BYRNE, who supply nearly all the drug-stores of Jersey City and Brooklyn; MATTHEWS, who supplies most of the street stands; SCHULTZ & WARNER, the proprietors of the splendid establishment in Central Park, and Dr. HABBURY SMITH. SCHULTZ & WARNER and HABBURY SMITH do a very large business in the manufacture of mineral and medicinal waters, such as Vichy, Seltzer, Kissingen, &c. Almost all the waters of the famous spas of this country and Europe are furnished at SCHULTZ & WARNER'S establishment in such close imitation of the originals that it is scarcely possible to detect the difference. With a close analysis of the different spring waters, and a thorough knowledge of chemistry, it is claimed that all of the celebrated health-giving waters can be manufactured so as to be equal in all respects, in their medicinal virtues, to the original springs.

According to the best estimates that can be made, it is believed that the consumption of soda and mineral waters in this City during the Summer is not less than 200,000 glasses per day, on an average, and that in very warm weather, like that we have had for the last six weeks, the daily consumption would be nearly double that quantity. Allow cents per glass this would give a sum equal to $10,000 per day expended during the Summer months for soda-water in the City of New-York. The consumption in Brooklyn is probably about one-third that of New-York.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

Both dealers, and all interested in real estate, congratulate themselves that the coming week closes the Summer season. Although August is a proverbially dull month, and one in which but little business is usually transacted, the last month has been the dullest known for years in all classes of property. The market could not well be worse, and all hope, with the opening of Fall, that a change for the better will result.

The last week, like those which have preceded it, has been an uneventful one; the only transactions worthy of note being the sale at the Exchange, on Tuesday, of twenty-four lots on One Hundred and Fifty-sixth-street, for $91,720—the details in regard to which were given fully and exclusively in the TIMES of Wednesday—and the sale of JOHNSON & MILLER at New-Brunswick, N. J., on the same day. The latter sale was a complete success, some 275 lots being disposed of. The transaction closed the sale of lots on the Van Nuise farm, and the sum realized from Tuesday's auction, together with that received at the first sale, reached the handsome sum of $600,000, being an average per city-sized lot of about $100 apiece.

Owing to the fact that Saturday last was the first of the Race days at Long Branch, and from other unforeseen causes, the sale of lots at that place on the day named, under the direction of A. D. MILLICK, Jr. & BRO., did not take place. The attendance was not as large as was anticipated, and rather than sacrifice a really valuable and desirable property, it was deemed best to postpone the sale to a future day, which was accordingly done.

The sales above referred to comprise the business of the week. The transfer record for the same time shows a list of fifty-eight, representing City property valued at $1,040,503, an increase over the previous week. For the present week the following sales are already advertised:

To-morrow, at 1 P. M., on the premises, A. D. MILLICK, Jr., & BROTHER sell at Cherry Hill, in the suburbs of the town of Hackensack, N. J., 200 choice lots. They are all well located on prominent streets, and the easy terms upon which they are offered bring them within the reach of all. The towns and villages that this auction estimate needs no particular mention, as the village is well known as one of the most thriving in our sister State. The lots themselves are some of the best in this section, and with the publicity already given to the sale, the attendance of buyers should be large, and to the benefit of the transaction favorable. For the convenience of buyers and others free passes will be furnished for a special train, leaving New-York at 11 A. M., from foot of Chambers-street, or 10¾ o'clock from the foot of Twenty-third-street. Luncheon, under a large tent, will be served on the arrival of the train. For map, terms, and all particulars relating to the auction application should be made to the auctioneers, No. 6 Pine-street.

To-morrow also A. J. BLEECKER, SON & CO., will sell at Hoboken, N. J., the property known as the Mountain Park Observatory, consisting of the house itself, with a large telescope, and a plot of ground surrounding it, containing fifty lots, each 25x100. The premises are opposite Twenty-sixth-street, in this City, and the opportunity is here offered to obtain possession of a valuable property, already well-known, and a prominent place of resort. The sale is at 12 o'clock, on the ground.

During the week a large number of sales will probably take place at the Exchange, as a variety of legal transactions are noticed to be thus finally disposed of, unless adjournments should interfere. It is understood, however, that time will not be the case, and the week, altogether, promises well to results more satisfactory than any that have preceded it for a long time past.

REAL ESTATE AT AUCTION.

O. H. PRESSON, Auctioneer.

CHERRY HILL.

BY A. D. MILLICK, JR., & BRO., Auctioneers and Dealers in New-Jersey Real Estate, No. 6 Pine-st., New-York.

The owners of the well-known Cherry Hill property have decided to close out the balance of their lots at

PUBLIC AUCTION,

On TUESDAY, Aug. 30, at 1 P. M., on the premises.

This property has long been known as one of the most valuable and beautifully located estates in New-Jersey. It is situated in the town or just in the suburbs of HACKENSACK, 10 miles' drive from Hoboken, and one hour from New-York, by the Hackensack Railroad. Some 200 lots of this choice property remain unsold, and the owners have decided to offer them without regard to value, so as to close the account; they are very desirable, being located on prominent streets, and adjoining the elegant residences of Messrs. Q. A. Bogert, Johnston, Lozier, A. Mann, and others, on an elevation overlooking the country for miles around. The soil is a rich, gravely loam, entirely free from red, sand, and very stiff. Free passes will be furnished for special train, leaving New-York at 11 A. M., from foot of Chambers-st., or 10¾ o'clock from the foot of 23d-st. Luncheon will be served on the arrival of the train. This is a rare opportunity to obtain a home in the very choicest section in the State on very easy terms, 70 PER CENT. being allowed to remain on bond and mortgage. Full particulars at the office of the auctioneers, Pine-st.

AUCTION SALE OF THE CAMDEN Rolling-Mill Company's property.

By virtue of a decree of the Court of Chancery, on the 1st day of SEPTEMBER, 1870, at 12 o'clock, on the premises, in the City of Camden, State of New-Jersey, the real estate, buildings and machinery belonging to the CAMDEN ROLLING-MILL COMPANY; also fourteen brick dwellings on Cooper's Point, also three vacant lots. This is one of the most valuable properties that is to be found in the country. Its location, on the Delaware River, affords great advantages for the shipment of its products, such as iron and nails, gas and water pipe, and is well worth the attention of capitalists wishing to engage in the business. Any information relating to the property may be obtained by calling on the office on the Works, or by letter. Address

ELIZABETHTOWN & PADUCAH RAILROAD,

OF KENTUCKY,

FIRST MORTGAGE

8 Per Cent. Twenty-Year

Convertible Bonds.

This Road, connecting the important points of Louisville and Paducah, is 135 miles long and passes through a rich agricultural and mineral section of the State of Kentucky, the traffic of which, it is believed, will be abundantly remunerative.

Nearly the whole line is under contract, and thirty-one miles of the road are already in successful operation.

The stock subscriptions (of which the City of Louisville subscribed $1,000,000) amount to $3,095,000.

To lay the rails and completely equip the road, THREE MILLION DOLLARS of First Mortgage Convertible Bonds have been authorized, bearing eight per cent. interest, payable semi-annually at the BANK OF AMERICA, in the City of New-York, on the 1st days of March and September.

These Bonds are the only lien upon the property and franchises of the Company, and are deposited with the UNITED STATES TRUST COMPANY OF NEW-YORK, which will pay over the proceeds of the bonds to the Railroad Company only in the ratio of construction.

The most rigid care has been exercised to protect the interest of the bondholders by every legal safeguard. The bonds can be converted into stock at the option of the holder for seven years after the completion of the road. The management is in the hands of some of the most responsible and favorably known business men of Kentucky. With the guarantee of their able and faithful directors, and the large amount of stock subscribed, these bonds form a very safe and desirable investment.

The price of the bonds at present is 87½, and accrued interest.

Any further information will be furnished upon application to the undersigned.

8 per Cent. Interest

FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS.

Principal and Interest Payable in Gold.

The First Mortgage Eight Per Cent. Gold Bonds of the ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD COMPANY are for sale by the undersigned. Price, 97½ and Interest. The amount of Bonds issued is $1,350,000 on 111 miles of road, of which 36 miles are completed, and the grading of the balance finished, while the iron and materials are on the track to complete it.

This road, completed and about being finished, together with rolling stock, lands, property of every description, and franchises, is mortgaged to the Mercantile Loan and Trust Company in trust for the security of these bonds. This property has a value more than double the amount of this mortgage. The net earnings of the Company are constantly on the increase, and are in excess of the amount required to pay the interest on these bonds. The payment of the interest and principal is therefore fully secured. The bonds are in denominations of $1,000 and $500. Interest payable semi-annually in New-York, London or Frankfort on the Main. We unhesitatingly recommend them, and will furnish maps and pamphlets upon application.

RAILWAY COMPANY

SEVEN PER CENT.

Consolidated Mortgage Sinking Fund Bonds.

The Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway Company, for the purpose of providing for the payment of its several mortgage debts as they become due, has executed a mortgage to the Union Trust Company, of New-York, as Trustee, upon the whole of its Railroad and branches, published the first day of July, in the great sum thousand lines transfered.

COUPON BONDS of $1,000 each will be issued with interest at Seven per centum per annum, payable semi-annually, on the first day of January and July, in each year, and REGISTERED BONDS of $1,000, $5,000 and $10,000 each, without coupons, with interest at Seven per centum per annum, payable quarterly, on the first day of January, April, July and October, in each year, principal and interest payable at the office of the Union Trust Company in New-York.

We call the attention of investors especially to this class of REGISTERED BONDS, which, on account of the SECURITY AFFORDED AGAINST LOSS BY ROBBERY, FIRE OR OTHERWISE AND THE PAYMENT OF QUARTERLY INTEREST, offer an investment peculiarly desirable.

A limited amount of these bonds can be purchased at 97½, and accrued interest, upon application to

EXPLORING CONEY ISLAND.

A Sunday Excursion Thither—Hunters and Things on the Journey not Before Noted—Shooting Hand-Snipe on the Beach—A Mysterious Hermit in the Interior—A Tale of Hidden Treasure.

"Where are you going?" said a good lady to her brave lord, as she discovered him setting all sail at an early hour yesterday morning.

"Going down to Coney," was the response.

"Down to Coney! Who is Coney?" was the rejoinder.

"Never mind," he replied; "I haven't time to tell you now, but you can read all about it in the NEW-YORK TIMES of to-morrow," and then we come to tell our experience on a trip "Down to Coney," as the "sovereigns" are accustomed to express it.

There lives, perhaps, neither man, woman or child in these parts who, through the newspapers or otherwise, has not heard of Coney Island; but we have something to tell concerning a Sunday excursion thither that may prove interesting to the reader. Before taking a survey of the island itself, it may be deemed proper and sensible first to get there. Should the explorer be disposed to enjoy the fresh sea-breezes on his journey thither, he can take the steam-boat Nesa, at Peck-slip, and pursue his voyage with all the assurance of safety of life and limb, compatible with the present rapid strides of civilization. But if he prefers, he can cross the Fulton Ferry, and find a rapid and easy means of locomotion in the Coney Island horse-cars. If the gentleman be of an inquiring mind, and has once passed through the New-York Bay, he will find the inland route preferable; for, whereas the water of the bay seem, with little variation, always to maintain the same metes and bounds, sparkle in the same sunlight, and wear the same blue line, the whole face of nature is rapidly changing along the inland line. The church bells have scarcely begun to sound their notice to those who are disposed to attend the temples dedicated to the worship of the Almighty, as the two-horsed democratic vehicle speeds on its way to the outskirts of Metropolitan civilization. As we pass through Jay-street, Brooklyn, the worshipers are already on bended knees within the venerable walls of St. James, the first Roman Catholic Church erected on Long Island. Further on the deacons of the venerable Methodist Church are crowding into the vestibule, and apparently discussing the grave interests of which they have charge, while numbers of laymen and women are on their way to their favorite house of worship. Some of these latter seem to cast a pitying glance at the car full of passengers, and one could imagine that in their hearts they regarded all on board as idle, pleasure-seeking and ungodly people, whose deserts would certainly be meted out to them either here or hereafter. A Coney Island horse-car, like time, waits not upon the thoughts of men, and while we are staring and thinking, and reflecting on this thing and that, we find ourselves already slowly ascending the Gowanus Heights. The old bay, now fast disappearing before the inroads of dirt-carts, calls to mind the days of the Revolution, when the American patriots were entertained on board several ships under British command, in a manner altogether becoming a great nation then "marching at the head of civilization." One can almost imagine, especially if he be a descendant of some of those noble sires, that the savory odors of the viands on which his forefathers feasted whisk past his appreciative nose as he crosses the drawbridge. The glorious reminiscences of Gowanus Bay are marred by but a single trifling drawback, and that is fever and ague. This, however, we are assured, attacks strangers only; those who have become acclimated regarding this peculiarity of the neighborhood as a most healthful element. The wayfarer will, nevertheless, remark, in passing through, that bills bearing the cabalistic words: "This house to let," are numerous in proportion as ruddy cheeks are scarce. Should an excursionist find himself weary of life, he has arrived now at the exact point where he can most readily be relieved of all his troubles. At the corner is a drug-store, and within sight is Green-Wood Cemetery. He has but to invest $18 50, according to the revised tariff, and he can forthwith relieve himself and his friends of the burden of his existence. But we have arrived on the summit of the Heights, whence we can survey Brooklyn, New-York, the Bay with its myriad of masts, and with one grand sweep of vision take in the hills of New-Jersey, the slopes of Staten Island, the grand channel with the old occasional fort in the centre, and vis-a-vis, the formidable unfinished work, while away to the south-east stretch the plains of Flatbush, the sands of Coney and the blue waves of the Atlantic beyond. Six cents has brought us thus far, and as we gaze on the surrounding scene, we are led to exclaim in the words of the unprofitable though practical admirer of DAN. EMMETT'S butter, "Be me soul it's worth it." Here, with the uninterrupted breezes of heaven sweeping on it from all points, stands the elaborate mansion of LITCHWELD, an early squatter in that neighborhood, but whose stately home has now been absorbed within the boundaries of the new Park. Those who are not irrevocably bent on seeing Coney can here step off, and either wander in the shade of Prospect Park, or take a returning car. Should they be hardened with more than ordinary Christian mood, they can here invest in a stick of candy, a cigar, a glass of soda, a bouquet, a bun pup or a goat. Leaving the boundary-line, we sweep down the hill toward the Coney Island road, the plains of Flatbush, with all their wealth of corn and cabbage, lying before us. As the car turns the corner to strike the main road, we pass a small farm, the slope of which is carpeted with corn, whose primeval beauty will doubtless soon yield to the march of civilization. Its long gradual decline at once strikes the practiced eye as a position eminently adapted for artillery in case of a battle, and forcibly calls to mind the historic heights of Fredericksburg, on whose sanguinary slopes so many green graves clustered in a bloody and imperishable embrace. Except the trifling inconvenience of dust, the road from the city boundary affords one of the finest drives in the country. Already about sixty feet wide, it is said the directors purpose doubling its present width. We have now passed the entrance to Prospect Park, and are outside of immediate Police jurisdiction, and begin to realize all the glorious freedom which pertains to the dominion of "leather-heads" and town constables. Among other barbarities of city life, restraint on the sale of the ardent is henceforth a dream of the past. No Maine Law fanatic, who thinks his abdominal engine can only be kept in motion by a supply at least once every five minutes, need come to Coney for a drink on Sunday. Along the road, at intervals of one-sixteenth of a mile are facilities for wood and water—entertainment for man and beast. First in order is McDonald's. Then follows, in due course, Jones', Rogers', Tunison's, Hall's, Post's, Stewart's and Harris'. Many of these places are of recent origin, having been transformed from private residences. To the proprietor of one, TUNISON's and Poet's beer is the palm. Directly opposite TUNISON'S is HALL'S, one of the new growth. This was formerly the private residence of Mr. HAGGERTY, one of the well-known glass firm of that name in Brooklyn. Poor HAGGERTY! For years he had labored through industry and economy, to draw around his family the comforts of a luxurious home. His residence was among the most elegant on the road; he had secured independence, and could exclaim, (and have been of business men, but, alas! in a bilarious but evil hour, he forgot to evince that profound respect which is due to a locust club, and his life paid the penalty. Not far from the island is the jumping off place called Gravesend. Instead of being a grave, and it is to be hoped regarding, for here, right around "Pop" HARRIS' place, is the perpetual camping ground of fever and ague. Hard by the road, in the centre of the sweep, whence comes this plague of humanity, some humane individual having the well-being of his kind at heart, posted a notice cautioning travelers not to encamp on the grounds, under penalty of legal prosecution. On making inquiry from MARTIN, the stableman, about the necessity of such a notice, his response was: "Be me word, if every body knew as much about it as I do, the d—l a notice they need stick up." In the course of MARTIN'S experience, he has chicken all the way from off his beat, and caste very near shaking off his mortal coil.

But, the lower toll-gate is passed, and the conductor informs us that we are getting on the territory of Coney Island. On the land side the boundary is not very distinct, and a stranger who was not informed of the fact, would have some difficulty in discovering where the main land ended and the island began, but this defect is fully made up for on the other side. Here the boundary is distinct enough, and plainly admonishes all "Thus far shalt thou come and no farther." One of the gravest facts connected with the place, is the mystery which envelopes its origin. Many are the claimants for ownership of this sand bar, and not infrequently has a patch of it figured as the basis for straw bail in the judicial affairs of this City. In the absence of those having a better title, the Commissioners of Gravesend have arrogated to themselves the right to exercise jurisdiction in the premises, which they do by charging a small amount of annual rent to those who have erected hotels and saloons. Of both the latter there is no lack of all shapes and sizes; they stare you in the face on jumping off the car, and fling their doors wide open to the hungry or thirsty wayfarer. Among the chief hotels are Green's, Wyckoff's, Thompson's, the Ocean and Oceanic houses, and a formidable affair kept by one Always Open. The hostelry of Mr. Always Open is remarkable for its extreme diminutiveness, and the disproportionate size of an American flag which floats above it.

Mysterious are the ways of Coney Island. All characters of flags, yesterday, were floating from house-tops, indicating the nationality of the hosts, and of the guests to be made most welcome. Among the incongruities noticeable in this line was that of the Irish national flag floating over the house BRIMMERMAN. At another shanty was visible the sign, "LAMPS & BURNS, Bathing Ladies"—whatever that may mean. Prominent on the beach, for the guidance of all visitors, was also the following notice: "Bathing without full suits positively prohibited by law." Almost at the foot of the pole bearing this same notice, and centrally of a hotel and a dog, both doubtless, illustrations of the dire consequence resulting from a disregard of the notice to bathe only in a full suit. At intervals along the shore were six or seven men of the chase. Before them, at the water's edge, were placed decoy birds in order to lure the sand-snipe to their destruction. Boarding along up the beach with the south wind, blew, these birds were first saluted with a volley from the first sanguinary hunter, and if, peradventure, they escaped his aim, they received a similar salute from the six or seven others in succession. If, finally, any escaped in running the gauntlet, he was indeed a lucky sand-snipe.

The rumor had been for some time circulated that a science hermit, abhorring civilized society, had built him a hermitage on the southwest or back side of the island, and we resolved to solve whatever mystery might surround the matter. About half-way down the island our progress is interrupted by a creek, which at once suggests the propriety of continuing our explorations with bare feet. It takes but a second's experience in this line to enable one to realize the extreme luxury of walking on the velvet beach with naked feet. The mind naturally reverts to those children of nature, the red men, whose stately stride is the result of neither muscles untrestrained, save by the cord and yielding moccasin. Tailors and shoe-makers evidently have contributed their full share to the deformities which mark the human race of today. Crossing the island, we come up with another explorer, who is up to his knees in sand in pursuit of a snipe which was wounded by another hunter on the opposite side, and having thrown down, fell exhausted. Thus is realized the doctrine that "one man sows and another reaps." But we are at the Hermitage, where we encounter two young gentlemen surrounded with all the paraphernalia necessary for hunting and fishing. Their father, Mr. F. A. BURNHAM, who lives at No. 118 West Eleventh-street, and has the furniture to express, rented from the Town Commissioners last year 500 acres, on which he has erected his Summer residence. The establishment is not very extensive, 'tis true, but it has the advantage of being in a peaceful neighborhood, and in the midst of many of the natural curiosities which are the delight of the chase. There is still more mysterious rumor that Mr. BURNHAM is here to search for the hidden treasures of the pirate GUINE, and that he or some others have had partial success in the line. But time would suffice fail us all that surrounds this piece of territory. Suffice it to say that it has the best bathing beach in the country; that it was yesterday quiet and orderly; that clams are its staple product, and that they cost all they are worth. Passing on to the lower end of the island you take the boat if you like for home, and if you prefer it, after a pleasant sail, you are landed beneath the shadow of Trinity. A Sunday thus spent by one of an inquiring mind is not altogether time thrown away.

THE ALLEN MURDER.

Inquest by Coroner Rollins—The Evidence and the Verdict—Allen Committed—Great Excitement in the Neighborhood.

Coroner ROLLINS proceeded, yesterday, to hold an inquest in the case of THOMAS CONNOLLY, who was murdered on Saturday night, at the foot of East Fifty-fifth-street, as narrated in yesterday's TIMES. The occurrence of the tragedy created the utmost excitement in the neighborhood, as all of the parties were well known, and Capt. GUERNEY, of the Nineteenth Precinct Police, found it difficult to keep quiet the large crowds that had gathered about the Station-house, and they became still more excited when the Coroner arrived to make an investigation. The following evidence was elicited:

ANNA ALLEN, wife of the prisoner, testified that her husband keeps a bathing-house and boats for hire at the foot of East Fifty-fifth-street, where they also reside; they have two Germans in their employ, one as a swimming-master and the other to attend to the office; on the 4th of July, the deceased had some difficulty with the swimming-master, who has since gone to Europe; CHARLES PUFF, the present swimming-master, had nothing whatever to do with that misunderstanding; the deceased frequently threatened to take the German's life, and one night about four weeks ago he and four others came to the baths for the purpose of creating a disturbance, and as the witness believes to take the German's life; on Saturday night about 6½ o'clock, CONNOLLY and three other men came to the baths and asked for drinks, which her husband gave them; one of the men took up two of the glasses and poured the contents on the floor, and put the glasses under his coat. ALLEN took one of them from him; one of the men, having a light hat and coat on, came into witness' room and said: "Oh, I thought my girl was here; the man who had the glass then threw it at ALLEN, and another came through the glass door; a root-beer bottle was next thrown through the door, followed by a shot from a horse-pistol, which one of CASSIDY'S friends carried under his coat; MRS. ALLEN then fainted, as she supposed she was shot; there were five of her children in the room at the time the shot was fired; the very moment the men entered the house, Mrs. ALLEN got PUFF out of the room, as she thought they wanted to kill him, as she recognized them as the same gang who wanted to kill HAMBRECHT, the old swimming-master, on the 4th of July; PUFF ran upstairs, and remained there until the trouble was over; during the difficulty ALLEN requested the deceased to go out of the house, but they refused; she then ordered CONNOLLY to take the pistol from under his clothes and give it to one of the others, who fired the shot into Mrs. ALLEN'S private room. [JEREMIAH LYNCH was here confronted with the witness, and she fully identified him as the man who had fired the pistol; he had on a white hat, which was the one her husband owned.] She resumed her testimony, and stated that ALLEN did not get his gun until after the shot was fired into his room; the gun was always kept loaded, and was loaded after the men entered the house.

CATHARINE CUNNINGHAM, who resides with Mrs. ALLEN, testified that when CONNOLLY and the three men came in, they went to PUFF, and one of them said, "Go for him;" a difficulty then occurred, which resulted in a glass beer-bottle and a pistol-shot being fired into Mrs. ALLEN'S room; witness saw CONNOLLY give the pistol to LYNCH; after that they tried to first open the door which was fastened, and then kicked it in; they poured the contents of the glasses on the floor. LYNCH asked MRS. ALLEN for his gun, and she told him she didn't keep any; MR. ALLEN asked CONNOLLY three times to go away, the glass door of MRS. ALLEN'S room was all broken down.

MATHEW GARRETT, of No. 1,071 Second-avenue, testified that he had accompanied the deceased to ALLEN'S place, when LYNCH and BUTLER came in and created a disturbance by pooping into MRS. ALLEN'S room; witness asked the deceased to come away, as he feared there would be a row; ALLEN took a glass from BUTLER, and then brought out a gun from his own room, and told him to go out or he would settle him, but he did not level the gun at any one. The witness and CONNOLLY left the place, and as they were going up the hill the witness heard the report of a gun and saw ALLEN near the door of his place with a musket; the deceased was fifty yards behind the witness; he did not then know the deceased was shot; a second shot was then fired; CONNOLLY then exclaimed that the witness knew of, nor did he see any bottles or pistols fired, as testified by the two women.

JEREMIAH LYNCH, of Eighty-fourth-street, testified that when the party went to ALLEN'S and called for drinks there were some words, when ALLEN brought out a gun; BUTLER was intoxicated, and he and the witness cleared out after hearing some shots; CONNOLLY did not hand the witness a pistol or tell him to "go for PUFF;" there were no pistols or bottles fired by the party; the deceased had been found in possession of a bung-starter, but the witness insisted he had never seen it before.

RICHARD ALLEN, who shot the deceased, was then examined, and told the same story as his wife regarding the origin and manner of the disturbance; when the men threw the glasses and bottles, and fired the pistol, POWERS, his boatman, fired three shots from a revolver, and ALLEN stepped to the door, and fired toward the river, as in a direct line from the place where the deceased was found dead; he professed to have no knowledge of the charge of the gun, and did not think it contained slugs or bullets; it was very dark, and he could not see to take aim, as he is blind in one eye, and seen imperfectly with the other; he positively swore that a pistol was fired at him through the door.

Dr. JOHN BLACK testified that he made a post-mortem examination, and found a gun-shot wound in the back, which fractured the spinal column, and several ribs, the bullet or slugs escaping on the right side of the neck, mid-way between the collar-bone and the lower jaw.

The jury rendered a verdict against the prisoner, RICHARD ALLEN, and the Coroner remanded him to the Tombs. Bail will probably be accepted in a day or two.

JEREMIAH LYNCH was once arrested recently for robbing an express wagon, and when brought to trial sentence was suspended. He is now under bail for stabbing a man a few months ago.

ANOTHER MURDER IN BROOKLYN.

A Husband Supposed to Have Cut His Wife's Throat—Jealousy the Cause.

The residents of the quiet little town of Flatbush, together with those residing in the city line of Brooklyn, were thrown into a great state of excitement, yesterday morning, by the announcement that a brutal murder had been committed in their midst. The victim was a woman named BRIDGET RYAN, thirty years of age, residing in the town of Flatbush, between Brooklyn and Hudson avenues, about ten yards from the city line. She and her husband, JOHN, it appears had not, for some time back, lived on very good terms; in fact, for the last two weeks, the neighbors say, they quarreled and fought incessantly. The immediate cause of this is alleged to have been jealousy. JOHN discovered, or thought he did, that his wife was too intimate with a man named THOMAS MCLAUGHLAN, and, in consequence, became quite savage; indeed, into such a state had he worked himself that Bridget was afraid. She dared not enter the room with him on Saturday night. She therefore lay down in the kitchen with her clothes on. On getting up yesterday morning she went out to the stables; JOHN saw her and followed her until reaching the stairs of a dollar used for storage purposes, when he seized her by the neck, dragged her down-stairs and cut her throat with his razor. That is the story as told and believed by the detectives at present.

STATEMENT OF THE ACCUSED.

JOHN's statement, however, differs from the foregoing materially. He denies having murdered her, and says she committed suicide. He says that, missing her yesterday morning, he went out to the stable, and hearing groans in the cellar went down and found her lying with her throat cut. (The razor was found about twelve feet from the body.) Information of the death was first communicated to the Police by the alleged murderer. Seeing Officer ABERCROMBIE on duty near the house he told him the story just related, and took him to the spot, when matters were found as here described. The dead body was sent to the Hospital and the husband was taken into custody. The detectives are at work on the details of the case.

A Gang of Counterfeiters Captured Yesterday.

WM. MARTIN, alias Wm. Russell, a well-known counterfeiter, was arrested yesterday, by officers attached to Col. WHITELEY'S Secret Service Detective Squad, for having been extensively engaged in the sale and passage of counterfeit money. MARTIN though a professional shoulder-hitter was seized by the officers before he could use his fists, and was marched off to the Head-quarters in Bleecker-street. The detectives also arrested WM. JOHNSON alias John Theodore, who was with MARTIN at the time. JOHNSON says he is a hobby-horse maker, but the officers have evidence to show that he has been engaged in the counterfeit business. Both of the men had been in a space all night, and so fell the easier victims to the wiles of Col. WHITELEY. Having secured both JOHNSON and MARTIN, Col. WHITELEY proceeded to the house No. 55 West Houston, and was successful in finding the alleged leader of the gang, MICHAEL MORAHAN, fast asleep in the apartment of one of the female tenants. These three men have been extensively engaged in circulating counterfeit $20 bills on the Shoe and Leather National Bank of this City, and Col. WHITELEY has, through his men, made several deals with them for the purpose of making evidence against them. The prisoners will be taken before a Commissioner today.

Bishop Bayley at St. Patrick's Cathedral, Newark—What He Thinks of the Ecumenical Council and the Newspapers.

It being understood that Bishop BAYLEY was to preach at St. Patrick's Cathedral, in Newark, yesterday, at 10½ o'clock A. M., the congregation began to assemble at an early hour, and, before the time of service, not a sitting or standing place could be had in the cathedral, or even in the porches, where a view of the altar could be had. Some devout worshipers were kneeling and crossing themselves on the outer steps, and as many more in the vestibules, far away from the sound of the Bishop's voice.

Bishop BAYLEY commenced by saying that he was truly grateful to meet once more with his children, and proceeded to explain to the audience his views of the Ecumenical Council, first stating that his remarks would be few and without preparation, but that at no distant day he would give them his carefully prepared opinions of the course, and account of his visit at Rome. Bishop BAYLEY said that the Church was not believed in infallibility, that it was one of its accepted doctrines, and all that it has ever needed was to be confirmed by council.

He was particularly severe on the Press, and stated that the accounts of the Council as published in the papers were without foundation in truth. Especially the reports published in the London Times, he said, were lies from beginning to end, and where a sprinkling of truth did occur it was so perverted as to make it one of the worst of falsehoods.

After promising to resume the subject at an early day, and to publish his remarks, which so intently listened to by the audience, which was so closely packed in the cathedral as to render it very uncomfortable. The Bishop is looking remarkably well, and his people, who are very devoted to him, receive him home with joy.

Murderous Assault Upon a Man by his Wife.

At a late hour on Saturday night, WM. BROWN, of No. 228 Stanton-street, had a quarrel with his wife MARY, about some trifling matter. The dispute roused the passions of both husband and wife, and WILLIAM struck MARY with his hand. She, in retaliation, seized a hatchet and dealt him a terrible blow in the head with the numerous weapon. BROWN left the house in a quiet manner, and proceeded to Bellevue Hospital of his own accord, when the surgeon ascertained that his skull was fractured, and he remains in the institution in a very dangerous and precarious condition. The Eleventh Ward Police learned of the assault during yesterday afternoon; for the first time, when they proceeded to arrest Mrs. BROWN and hold her to await the action of a Magistrate. Mrs. BROWN professes to have had no intention to so severely wound her husband, and says that she merely acted in self-defense. An investigation will be had today, at Essex Market.

Newark Morals and the Sunday Horse-Cars.

From 3 o'clock Sunday morning till 8 o'clock at night not a single arrest was made by the Newark Police, which is a very unusual circumstance. The horse-cars ran all day as on other days, except that those through Belleville and Woodside only ran to the city lines, but did not penetrate those forbidden districts. Multitudes of people went into the country and the suburbs to spend the day, which may account for the quiet within the city limits.

Felonious Assaults Yesterday.

THOMAS KELLY, aged thirty-two, of No. 441 West Thirty-third-street, became involved in a quarrel, yesterday, with JAMES LAVELL, of Thirty-third-street and Tenth-avenue, when the latter drew a knife and stabbed him in the head and right side, both wounds being slight. No arrest were made.

Last evening as JAMES GALLAGHER, of Tenth-avenue, near Thirty-fifth-street, was standing on the corner of Thirty-fifth-street conversing with some acquaintances, he was shot in the hip by some unknown person, sustaining a slight wound. The assailant escaped recognition and arrest.

MORRIS CAUGHLIN, aged thirty-three, of No. 167 Ludlow-street, quarreled with JOHN O'CONNOR, aged twenty-five, of No. 86 Ludlow-street, last evening at his residence, when CAUGHLIN seized O'CONNOR'S nether lip between his teeth and bit it off. The victim had his wound dressed and went home, while the assailant was arrested.

Last night Officer IRWIN, of the Eighteenth Precinct, arrested one of a gang of rowdies who were creating a disturbance in Avenue A, near Fifteenth-street. While taking his prisoner to the Station-house the officer was suddenly assaulted by the gang, who knocked him down and beat him in a most cruel manner. The prisoner, of course, escaped, as did all of his companions.

BASE BALL.

Star vs. Alpha—The Former Victorious.

The contest between these clubs, on Saturday, resulted in the signal success of the reconstructed Star nine by a score of 19 to 1, an error by the second base player of the Stars on the fourth innings letting the Alphas score the only run they made. The Stars fielded in fine style, and well earned their triumph. We give the score:

Umpire—Mr. ROGERS, of the Mutual Club.
Time of Game—Two hours and five minutes.

The Grand Match Today.

This noon the Athletic Club, of Philadelphia, will arrive at the Merchants' Hotel in Cortlandt-street, and at 1½ P. M. will proceed to the Union Grounds, Brooklyn, to play the return match of the championship series with the Mutuals of this City. Last week the Mutuals went to Philadelphia and defeated the Athletics by a score of 21 to 5. It is to wipe out this black mark on their playing reputation that the Philadelphians visit us today. The greatest interest is manifested in the game, and it is expected that fully 10,000 people will be present. The betting is at odds on the Athletics, with plenty of takers. A close and exciting game is anticipated. Should it rain the game will be played on Tuesday.

The White Stockings visited Rockford on the 26th to play the Forest City of that place, but they had to return home defeated by a score of 14 to 7.

Extensive Fire on the Newark Meadows—A Portion of Lister Brothers' Hemp-Dust Factory Destroyed.

At an early hour yesterday morning a fire broke out in one of the large new buildings belonging to Messrs. LISTER BROTHERS' hemp-dust manufactory, on the Newark Meadows. The origin of the fire has not been discovered, but from the fact that the flames first broke out after midnight—long after work had ceased—it is supposed that it was of incendiary origin. Great indignation has been felt and expressed by the people of Bayonne, on the opposite side of the bay from which city the manufactory stands, that the people of Essex County should have permitted the removal of the offensive works from the city of Newark to a point in so close proximity to their homes. The demon of the author of the conflagration were very nearly accomplished. The large new frame building—the principal building of the works—was entirely destroyed, the fire continuing to burn until daylight. The loss has not been ascertained, but is supposed to be heavy.

LOCAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

NEW-YORK.

MRS. CATHARINE LARKE, wife of Mr. JULIUS K. LARKE, an attaché of the Sun, died suddenly yesterday morning, at her residence, No. 68 Essex-street. MR. LARKE will have the sympathies of his friends on the New-York Press in his severe affliction. The deceased leaves a large family of young children. She was a native of England.

A pleasant way to reach the great depot running from Forty-second to Forty-fifth street, on Fourth-avenue, is (from down-town) by way of the Madison-avenue cars from Madison House, Eighty-fifth-street, passing alongside of the little range of parks in centre of Fourth-avenue, between Thirty-second and Forty-second street. These cars are of superior finish, and will be in readiness for the track as soon as it is laid over Murray Hill. That part of Fourth-avenue which extends between Forty-second and Thirty-fourth street is to be graded, so that the cars may run up and over the hill.

An interesting lecture is announced to be delivered this evening, at 8 o'clock, by Dr. HANS FOWBLE, at the hall No. 49 Ludlow-street, to gentlemen only. It is given under the auspices of the German Young Men's Christian Association.

MARY JOHNSTON, who had been arrested for intoxication, attempted suicide last night in the Tenth Ward Station by hanging herself to the door with a strip torn from her muslin dress. She was unable to stand when cut down, but finally recovered.

The fire at No. 120 Maiden-lane broke out again yesterday, caused by sparks from the engine at work pumping water out of the cellar. Two barrels of gasoline exploded, causing no damage.

BROOKLYN.

HONORA JOYCE and MARGARET RYAN, residing at the corner of Columbia and King streets, were arrested on Saturday night for assaulting JAMES KENNEY with an axe. It appears that KENNEY's wife was in the house of the assailants drinking, and that he wished to bring her home. Having knocked at the door, and being refused admission, he attempted to force it; the result of which was that he was cut upon and beaten in the most horrible manner with the instrument mentioned. He was taken to the Long Island College Hospital.

Officer LOONEY, of the Third Precinct, while engaged, late on Saturday night, in taking a man into custody for disorderly conduct in Court-street, was set upon by a band of ruffians and beaten in the most terrible manner. The prisoner was rescued during the mêlée, but was subsequently recaptured.

JOHN BRICKOUS, HENRY C. HILL and ANTHONY SEYMOUR were arrested, yesterday, for robbing HERR VIEBIG of a gold watch and chain, while he stood at the corner of Ewen and McKibben streets, about 1 o'clock in the morning.

A human leg that had evidently been sawed from the human body it originally belonged to, was found in the river, at the foot of Kent-street, yesterday, by Officer REID, of the Seventh Precinct.

LONG ISLAND.

At the meeting of the Suffolk County Board of Supervisors, last week, the Committee authorized to select and purchase a site for a County Poor-house reported that they had purchased the farm of WILLIAM PRINCE, near the depot at Yaphank, consisting of 160 acres, for $12,000, and in addition and for the purpose of making the lines at the farm more symmetrical, twenty acres more had been purchased of J. F. MILLS for $700. The land is under good cultivation, and is situated in a healthy and pleasant section of the county. Plans had been prepared for a building by Mr. CHAS. HALLETT, of Riverhead, and he was now engaged in preparing the specifications.

Further particulars of the loss of the schooner Ann Flower, of Cape Cod, on Thursday, off Fort Jefferson, are furnished by Capt. WALLACE BROWN, of Fort Jefferson, who went to the assistance of the disabled vessel. It seems the Ann Flower, loaded with molding sand and lumber, was grounded on Mt. Misery Shoal, just east of Fort Jefferson Harbor, when the schooner Hudson, of Rockland, Me., ran into her about 3 P. M., striking her on her port quarter, staving her boat, and smashing her beam in such a manner as to cause her to fill with water. The Hudson carried away her jib-boom and stove in her bow, but kept on her way and rendered no assistance. Capt. BROWN went to her assistance, but on the crew's determining to remain by her, lent his yawl. The crew succeeded in digging all the way from the mast, but it was breaking up and will be a total loss. The lumber will be saved.

Right Rev. A. N. LITTLEJOHN, Bishop of Long Island, administered the holy rite of confirmation at Christ Church, Sag Harbor, yesterday forenoon.

A County Convention will be held to-morrow, consisting of three delegates from each town in Suffolk County, for the purpose of choosing a delegate to represent the Assembly District in the State Convention of elected men, to be held at Syracuse Sept. 1. The object of the Convention is to advocate the passing of a law providing for the reparation of those drafted who were compelled to purchase substitutes at the commencement of the draft during the late war.

A new schooner, of 350 tons, was launched on Friday, from the yard of J. M. BAILEY & SONS, for parties of that place, and will be employed in general freighting, under command of Capt. LEWIS TUCKER, of Port Jefferson.

The water off the south side of the island is alive with mackerel, especially off Montauk and Block Island. A party of six caught in one day, with hook and line, 1,800.

NEW-JERSEY.

A wild steer escaped from a drove in the Fifteenth Ward of Jersey City, yesterday, and created for some time by his mad antics the greatest consternation among the residents of the ward. He was finally shot by an officer. So far as was learned no person was injured although several children had narrow escapes.

A number of boys have been in the habit of throwing stones and otherwise annoying a man by the name of HENRY BUSENMON, on Jackson-avenue, Jersey City. About midnight on Saturday night, as one MICHAEL MCKENNA was passing, he shot at and nearly hit him, under the impression that he was one of the offenders. BUSENMON was held to answer.

On Saturday evening a Texas steer became separated from a drove in Hudson City, and, rushing through Newark-avenue, fell into a sewer excavation. All attempt was made to release him, but in his maddened condition it was impossible, and he was shot.

REV. MR. WELLS, pastor of the Saddle River Lutheran Church, has accepted a call from the Lutheran Church at Canajoharie, N. Y.

The body of the boy CHRISTIAN HOFFMANN, who was drowned on Saturday at the Morris and Essex coal docks, was recovered yesterday. An inquest will be held by Coroner CRANE today.

The population of Perth Amboy is 2,602.
